Davidson

Nostalgia

Davidson opened early in September, so on the appointed day in 1919, I set off by local train from Easley (S.C.) taking a trunk containing all my belongings. The journey to Charlotte took four hours . . . There were two trains a day which ran to Davidson, 22 miles from Charlotte, or 50 minutes by train.

The little town of Davidson had about 1,500 inhabitants at that time, the great majority of whom were connected in some fashion with college activities. In 1919, there were no paved roads or streets in or around town.

When I entered college, the number of students in all four classes was around 425; of these, 174 were in my class. There was a big attrition year by year, and only 82 graduated with me in 1923.

Davidson still opens its doors to students in early September. Passenger trains, however, no longer stop in Davidson. Instead, students carrying an odd assortment of trunks, suitcases, stereos, Walkmans, and refrigerators arrive by plane, automobile, and bus.

The town of Davidson now has about 3300 inhabitants, many of whom are connected with college activities. In 1984, there are paved roads and streets both in and around town.

The number of students in all four classes hovers around 1350. There is no longer such a large rate of attrition; in 1984, 350 seniors completed graduation exercises.

Davidson Nostalgia

Although many things about Davidson have changed since 1923, there remains a certain continuity to the College and its traditions. Davidson College is still fondly known as "DC"; it retains its formidable reputation as a liberal arts college, ranking among the top ten independent liberal arts colleges in a U.S. News & World Report survey; and it continues to solicit support from dedicated alumni, raising over $825,000 for the Living Endowment Fund and exceeding its 1987 Program goal of $35 million four years ahead of schedule due to major alumni donations.

Davidson also continues to attract students of the highest calibre. 1984 was an especially heady year for academic scholarship. Hunter Monroe, student body president, will study in Oxford, England as Davidson's 21st Rhodes Scholar and Stephanie Moffet and Malcolm Campbell will represent the College as Watson fellows.

In 1984 diversity was king. Although Davidson traditions such as Homecoming, Parents' Weekend, the P.O., the E.H. Little Social Club, Queenies, and Patterson Court remained as strong as ever, the College also courted a wide variety of new trends. Memories of the year will include New Wave haircuts and dress, The Fixx, Flashdance, casual Big Weekends, The Big Chill, "Where's the beef?", Michael Jackson, MTV, the No-Pitchers 900 Room, town zoning regulations, ATO's demise, the popularity of all-girls eating houses, and the semester-back-to-trimester change. These memories are a part of everyone's "Davidson Experience;" they are all a part of the era we will soon call the Good Ol' Days.

Only Twenty Miles Away . . .

One recent evening I felt it my duty as an investigative reporter to join another Q & C staffer, Trish Lennon, and take a journey into the unknown — the real world. Yes, Davidson student, there IS a world outside of Davidson and only the adventurous few dare to explore it — and return to tell about it. Civilization exists to those “with wheels” and its nearest outpost is a mere twenty minutes away — in Charlotte. We two Davidson coeds, in the midst of that infamous sophomore year, drove to Charlotte to face the challenge head on.

5:42 — We drove out of Davidson with the windows down and the radio blaring. Who needs this place, we’re going to Charlotte! We were too cool as we drove around Patterson Court. Through town and South on I-77, we sped along, with Trish watching for cops. I think we set a new speed record. In any case we were incredibly lucky not to get pulled.

5:59 — Something is missing at Davidson — real fast-food. “Where’s the Beef?” At Wendy’s, of course, so we made a “Frosty” run. It was great; a Triple, an order of fries, and a thick, rich, Frosty for me. Trish ordered a salad, but realized that man (OR woman) cannot live on salad alone. She went back and got a Double, fries, and a Frosty.

6:33 — We had to have a drink. After all, it was Happy Hour, and what else is there to do except get “happy”? We decided to drop in at Bennigan’s for a couple of drinks. We debated on what movie to see — Trish wanted to see The Big Chill, and I wanted to see Terms of Endearment. It was my car and I was driving. So we drove to the theater playing Terms of Endearment.

7:16 — We arrived at the theater. The movie had started at seven. At Davidson this would be considered “fashionably late”. In the real world this was just late. Although it took us a while to figure out what was going on in the movie, we cried at the end. Afterwards we headed off in search of “the action.”

9:13 — We left the movie theater, got in the car, and drove. Drove where? That’s a good question! I don’t know how we did it. I thought we were driving south, but we were really heading northwest. One road turned into another. We turned left instead of right. In any occasion we were seriously lost — BIG TIME! I think we travelled every road in Charlotte. Somehow we got on Tyvola and landed at P.B. Scotts. Yes, somebody looks out for fools, children, and totally confused Davidson students.

9:37 — P.B. Scotts is one of the greatest places. First of all, it is a unique shape — a hexagon or something, with two balconies. The Producers were playing and they were jammin’! The place was packed with Davidson students, reminding us of “Davidson night” at P.B. Scott’s with Rolle Gray. But tonight we wanted to see it all — so we headed to Moxie’s.

11:41 — I have never seen so many people in one room! We walked into Moxie’s and encountered flocks of men and women in business suits. It seemed that the entire Charlotte business community had dropped in. All these good-looking young executives! If only we had been able to cross the room to talk to the guys who caught our eye. But the place was so crowded we couldn’t even see our feet! We could barely hear above the loud talking and drunken laughter. It was fun. Finally — a party where we didn’t know everyone!

1:57 — We staggered back into Davidson. We were tired but could not help talking about all we had seen. We wanted to tell all our friends about our night on the town, but when we got to the campus absolutely no one was around. The place was dead. Everyone was probably asleep or something. We were disappointed — how typically Davidson! Well, there was nothing left to do but go to sleep and dream about more fun times to come in Charlotte . . .

Escape from Davidson

In order to accommodate students wishing to take weekend vacations from Davidson, the Quips & Cranks has compiled this concise weekend travel guide listing some of the more popular destinations for "suitcase weekends." In preparing this guide, we have to ask ourselves why such information should even be necessary. What sort of weekend recreation could these locations possibly provide that Davidson lacks? We remain baffled, but the phenomenon continues.

Admittedly, Davidson is less of a suitcase school than other colleges and universities, and this fact attests to Davidson's thriving, well-rounded weekend social scene. To satisfy our curiosity, while we were talking to students about their favorite weekend hideaways, we inquired a little into their motives for getting away. One junior complained, "There's never anything going on around here! You have to get away if you plan to have any fun on the weekends!" Obviously a social hermit who pays no attention to the rampant weekend partying which goes on in Davidson. Another upperclassman sighed, "Well, you know how it is. After a week of intense studying and applying myself seriously to academics, I just need to get out and get away from the intensity of Davidson social life on weekends. It's just too much for me. I need a nice weekend in the great outdoors." One upperclassman coed responded by simply switching on her Cyndi Lauper tape: "Oh, Mamma dear, we're not the fortunate ones, the girls just wanna have fun!" We are not sure, but was she implying something about the social life of upperclass Davidson coeds? Probably not. Take them as you will, these are a few reasons why students take off on the weekends. But where do they go? Following is our concise list of favorite weekend getaways:

CHAPEL HILL. Home of the University of North Carolina, a renowned party school and excellent source of boy/girlfriends who've graduated from Davidson and are now killing a few more years in grad school before entering Real Life. 3 hour drive from Davidson.

WINSTON-SALEM. Cultural Mecca of the state and home of Wake Forest, social Mecca of western Carolinian college students. Also a popular locale for grad school boy/girlfriends. 1 hour, 15 minute drive.

SKI RESORTS. In winter, mountains like Beech and Sugar attract Davidson ski buffs to their snowy slopes. Travel time varies.

MYRTLE BEACH. When the weather turns warm, students swap the skis for the shades and head for the shores of South Carolina en masse. Cottages are available for rent and many students' families have houses near the ocean. 6 hour drive.

GRATEFUL DEAD CONCERTS. From east to west coast, Dead Heads drive to their concerts regardless of distance. The popularity of this weekend getaway is indicated less by the numbers who go than by the frequency of their trips. Ask your favorite eastern religion professor for more details. Travel time varies.

HOME. Perhaps the most popular weekend escape among Davidson students. Regardless of season, weather, or approaching exams, students flock home more often than to any other weekend spot. Attractions include Mom's cooking, a private room decorated to your own individual taste, and lots of familiar, friendly people. Travel time varies, but it's always worth the trip.

Donna Thompson, Howie Wilkins, and Jim Morgan escape the pressures of academia off the shores of Jarvisville Beach, North Carolina.

Davidson students enjoy the tradition of Mardi Gras in New Orleans.

The Hattie Thompson house is ready for a roadtrip after being vacated by Peregrine House restaurant.

The Davidson Post Office, forced to relocate because of space limitations, is the most frequented place off campus. The new Post Office is less convenient but holds the same treasures.

The changing faces of Davidson

So you thought you knew your way around Davidson? Guess again. The familiar downtown layout holds a number of surprises for the unwary student. New development and relocation is literally changing the face of the Davidson business district.

Peregrine House was the first to secede from Main Street as it abandoned the historic Hattie Thompson house, where it first opened in 1975. Peregrine's new home is at 127 Depot Street, once the site of the Davidson jail.

The structure vacated by the move dates from the 1870's. Its historical significance prompted some concerned citizens to intervene in the planned demolition of the building. They purchased it and planned to have it moved to a nearby site.

Further down Main Street, at Piedmont Bank and Trust, more changes appeared. The bank stayed where it was but merged with First Union National Bank, one of the largest banks in North Carolina.

These early alterations set the stage for a major development project begun by the town. The Davidson Town Plan is a 3-5 year project that includes the construction of a mall, a road, and walkways connecting the new structures with Main Street. The first installment was scheduled for completion sometime in the spring, with weather conditions being the major obstacle to definite planning.

Upon completion, this first structure became the new home of the Davidson Post Office. But there is no reason to forget that trek to the old Post Office building! The walk will remain — it will only be a little longer.

Confused? Don't despair — according to the Town Office, there is method to the changing faces of Davidson.

Flash: Dance craze sweeps campus

There's a new craze sweeping the nation to which even the small town of Davidson is not immune: Davidson students have caught the fitness craze. Guys and girls alike, clad in sweats and jogging shoes, are running, stretching, and lifting themselves into shape.

It all began a few years back when a few early risers, dressed in sweatshirts and running shoes, took to the streets to jog themselves into shape. The media picked up on the fad and soon were reporting that these people were not only healthier but also felt better about themselves. Soon everyone wanted to get into the action, and Davidson students were no exception.

Even today there is hardly a daylight hour when one cannot find someone running, jogging, or virtually crawling around the track. Each person's reason is different — skinny guys wanting to develop nearly non-existent muscles, athletes hoping to improve their speed, and overweight girls hoping to shed some unwanted pounds — but all the reasons come back to a common concern with physical appearance. Everyone wants to "look good."

But, as we all know, jogging isn't for everyone and as concern with fitness rose, so did the number of ways people approached it. The number of bicycles on campus grew substantially, and new racks were installed this year to meet the growing need. Last fall students returned to find new Nautilus equipment available in the weight room. Weight-lifting, once considered a male sport, has seen an increase in the number of women "working out." For most, the goal is not to become superwomen with biceps larger than the average male, but to tone flabby muscles and increase their strength. The era of the soft, fleshy, feminine woman is gone. The ideal woman today is tanned and muscular.

More recently, the craze has branched out into the field of aerobics. Once limited to actresses, models, and a few housewives struggling to keep up with Jack LaLanne, aerobics now has a huge following. A number of celebrities, including Jane Fonda and Olivia Newton John, are cashing in on this craze. Davidson is not without its share of Jane Fonda's disciples. The lounge of Cannon becomes a women's gym for one hour each day as a group of girls dressed in leotards, tights, and legwarmers submit to the commands of the demanding Ms. Fonda — and it isn't easy. Take it from someone with experience, when the background music asks "Can you feel it?" — you do, and when Ms. Fonda says, "there you are, you're all through with your workout — don't you feel good?", the only thing one really feels good about is that it is finally over.

But this year Jane Fonda's workout has met some competition as a new Flashdance course has taken off and soared in popularity. Modeled after the summer smash-hit movie by the same title, the course consists of a series of spot exercises and aerobics intended to get the heart beating as fast as possible.

According to program coordinator Phred Huber, this group is "dancing its life away" — almost literally. "In reality," admits Huber, "there is very little dancing at all. We called the course Flashdance because we knew it would attract a lot of people and it works."

Nearly 70 people, guys and girls alike, meet three days a week for one hour to work out. According to Huber the class challenges the most fit athlete. "Even the guys are impressed," she said. "It's a lot of hard work."

But is the course any fun? The answer is yes and no. It's hard work, and it hurts. So why bother? Perhaps the old phrase "No pain, no gain," applies here. It is a means to an end. What it costs in immediate discomfort, it rewards in long term gains. The course works for those who stick with it. They are, in fact, developing stronger, healthier, and more muscular bodies.

Aerobics is not, however, restricted to land. A few years ago a trim swim class was added. It attracted its own group of girls and has held its own ever since. Trim swim is water aerobics. It is a vigorous 1/2-3/4 hour daily workout aimed at trimming away excess pounds and working the heart. The workout is gradually increased over the ten-week period, so that the challenge never ends and neither does the pain! It is the ideal way to exercise for those who don't like to sweat and has the added benefit of requiring students to see themselves in bathing suits daily.

Of course, for some the fitness craze has become an obsession and for these people exercise ceases to be beneficial because it negatively affects other aspects of their lives. Consider the freshman whose mother asks him if he passed his first review. Will she be satisfied when he replies, "No, Mom, but I can bench press 200 lbs. now"? Somehow I doubt it. Although exercise can be beneficial, one must put priorities in order. Sure the Davidson motto encourages all to develop strong bodies and sound minds, but no one is grading students on how well developed their biceps are, and no one has ever been kicked out of school for failing to develop them at all.

So, what's it all about — this new fitness craze which has affected all our lives in some way? Why does Olivia Newton-John "want to get physical" and why does Diana Ross "want muscles"? The answer is simply — because it is the latest fad. Davidson students are conforming in an attempt to develop the characteristics of the new ideal man and woman. The student store has added new lines of athletic gear to meet the growing needs, and the students are buying them in mass quantities. A jazz and an aerobics class have been added to the P.E. course list. Students wear sweats, bandanas, and jogging shoes to class. (Our forefathers must be rolling in their graves.) Cars have been abandoned for bicycles — all in an attempt to get fit.

But is it working? For those who are dedicated and willing to withstand the pain, the answer is yes. Realistically, for most there has not been a dramatic improvement in physical fitness. Davidson is not yet a campus of Jane Fonda and John Travolta clones. Perhaps there are other benefits that justify the time and pain spent in exercising. Exercising releases tension, and tension is a reality at Davidson. It builds self-confidence and for most, increases study productivity. If it isn't helping, it certainly isn't hurting to go ahead and stretch those muscles, run that mile, and lift that weight . . . After all, everybody is doing it!

—Joanne Stryker

UP...DOWN...3...4... Male and female students alike participate in the Flashdance class sponsored by the physical education department.

The Nautilus system is a popular way to increase muscle strength and improve the body's appearance.

"Come on, gang, lift those legs!" Flashdance instructor Susan Kenn leads her students through rigorous aerobic routines.

Big Wheels on campus

From your first ice cream mixer as a freshman to your last margarita as a senior, your Davidson years are filled with "food, glorious food."

Reflect for a moment on the important events of these years. Are there not subliminal images of foods flashing behind your nostalgic memories of Davidson?

Never really given it a thought, huh? Well, hold on to your waistline and take a trip with me down memory lane.

From the day you step on the Union patio as a freshman and receive your boxed sandwich and éclair, you know Davidson is going to be some kind (?) of place. Lucky for you, freshman halls have tri-weekly mixers; this is where real nutrition steps in: ice cream parties, Dorito mixers, milk & cookies mixers, and pizza parties. It's at these mixers that many a date can be found drowning his sorrows in the M & M bowl; he may not make the girls melt, but the M &

M's are melting all over him!

And who can forget his first all-nighter? Does this not produce an image of greasy popcorn, Mello-Yello (commonly known as "speed"), ordered-out pizza, and Big Wheels? Everyone knows that the body needs extra fuel to burn the midnight oil. If you're going to be up all night, you can't begrudge yourself a 15-minute trip to 7-11 for a chocolate mint Big Wheel. Can you?!!

The sophomore and junior years are the times students really "go out" and explore the gastronomical delights of Davidson and her environs. It is at this time that one savors Quincy's sirloin tips, B & B's cheese omelettes, M & M's egg salad, Peregrine's hoagies, and Hardee's roast beef and fries.

Each of these establishments has a warm spot in some student's heart: B & B for its hot breakfast Sunday morning after a late Saturday night; Quincy's for saving everyone on Patterson Court from Sunday-night leftovers; Peregrine for caring enough to send the very best in late-night pizza; M & M for being a Davidson "institution" you can show to HTH's and imports; and McDonald's and Hardee's for providing fast food on days when every minute counts . . . like reading day.

Of course the most obvious and most nostalgic edible memories are those consumed in the Union Café, forever to be known as the Snack Bar. How many times did Grandma's Cookies draw you like a somnambulist out of the 'Braire at 11:00 p.m.? Didn't a chocolate chip milkshake perfectly top off a lunch of grilled cheese and potato chips? You can certainly say the Café has atmosphere; the bleeping of computer games mingles with the frantic voices of students cramming for reviews! And, too, the Café is the only restaurant I know of that allows you to keep your table all day if you wish!

Seniors wax nostalgic over many dishes and restaurants: F & M's chicken, Rusk's oreo ice cream, M & M's milkshakes, Casa Gallardo's margaritas, T.G.I. Friday's amazing menu, and Ding Haw's unlimited Chinese buffet. All of these things bring back fond memories of the times shared with good friends. More than likely, if you ask a Davidson senior what his favorite "Davidson" food is, he will gaze at you with a faraway look in his eyes and say, " . . . Well, I remember one night sitting around with a group of people in the dorm . . . " You know the rest I'm sure.

Needless to say food and the art of eating are an integral part of Davidson's nostalgia. If you don't believe it, may a campus dog devour your Homecoming tailgate lunch!

—Catherine Finegan

Home away from home, Quincy's Family Steak House offers both beef entrees and a multi-itemed salad bar for prices which fit within student budgets.

Got the munchies? The Union Café provides a multitude of snacks for hungry students.

Miles to go before you sleep? A red hot, beef and bean burrito will miraculously bring you back to the land of the living.

An adventurous spirit, senior Lynne Rogich whips up a favorite dish in the privacy of her kitchen/dormitory room.

What slices, dices, chops, and minces? Senior Rick Graves and his chipping knife pair up to create another dining masterpiece.

What's cookin'?

Every year a certain number of students choose to forego the conveniences and social benefits of Patterson Court and the Commons, and elect, instead, to eat independently. Their reasons for cooking on their own are as varied as the foods they choose to prepare, but all admit that eating independently adds a new dimension to their lives at Davidson.

Phred Huber says that in cooking her own meals she has taken a big step towards independence and learning to take care of herself. Phred places cooking on her list of major activities and claims to spend up to two hours a day in the kitchen. As she avoids the instant mixes and meals which form the diet of many other independent meal planners, she can justify the time she uses to cook. "There's a part of me in it," she says about her food, most of which she makes from scratch. Phred specializes in Chinese, Mexican, and Italian cuisines, but also bakes French bread, quiche, and blends her own cucumber soup.

Elizabeth Smiley cites economy and a desire to eat healthy food as her reasons for leaving an eating house and cooking on her own. Although she occasionally experiments with such dishes as a barley-mushroom casserole and ricotta cheese crepes, Elizabeth regularly lives on salads and the health-food staple, granola. By preparing her own food, Elizabeth saves half the eating house board bill.

Rick Graves gives two reasons for his decision to eat independently: a desire to save money, and a love of cooking. Rick chose a vegetarian diet because he likes vegetables and could avoid the expense of meat. As he particularly likes Mexican food, Rick spices his meals with cayenne pepper. Pinto beans, rice, lentils, curries, granola, and cottage cheese serve as the staples of his diet.

—Jane Harper

"What's for supper?" Senior Phred Huber, foodstar chef, tastes her dinner, which could be anything from chicken chow mein to beef stew.

The Working Class

For many at Davidson, school and jobs don't mix. Jobs are things to be found in the summer or, better yet, to be postponed until one faces the real world. Others manage to combine the hasty academic schedule at Davidson with real work — pay checks and everything! Many students find that jobs are an economic necessity. Well over one-third of the student body participates in the work-study program. This idea is for them to work their way through their education Abe Lincoln style. According to the program, work-study students are to earn two-thirds of the money which they are granted in their financial aid package. The work-study wage is $3.25 an hour. Students in the program generally assist the faculty and staff with administrative work. Some students help the maintenance staff. Others act as staff secretaries. And others work at the Union Desk.

The College Dining Service employs nearly 100 students. Senior Bill Alibone serves as the student supervisor in the Commons, where dozens of students work on the cafeteria line. In the 900 Room senior Lynne Rogich leads a relatively small staff of bartenders who like to call themselves the 900 Room Executives.

Other students see their jobs as a learning experience rather than as a source of dollars. Emily Davis landed a paid internship in Charlotte with the world renowned IBM. Davis thought that a temporary job with one of the world's most powerful corporations would be an invaluable supplement to a liberal arts education. "I couldn't pass up the chance to work with them," she said. "They're one of the best companies I know of to work for." Davis served as a marketing assistant, educating customers to the uses of certain computers.

Some students are lucky to find rewarding work with businesses much closer to campus. Polly Fishback was offered a job by Piedmont Bank on Main Street where she was employed as a branch teller. She applied for the job "for spending money and also hoping that the experience would help me in the future." Chris Woods sought another type of parttime job. He is employed by Blakely's Organ Makers. Woods took the job because he likes "the balance between work with the hands and with the mind." Woods is involved mostly with the carpentry aspect of production.

Scott Otto, on the other hand, works for no one: he is his own boss. An entrepreneurial capitalist, Otto planned his own money-making scheme. With the photography of Randy Stroud and Jim Morgan and the help of 12 male students who agreed to serve as models, Otto designed a macho calendar which he intends to sell to Davidson coeds as well as to students at Salem and Queens College. He printed 1000 calendars, which he priced at five dollars. Otto has confessed that the project has entailed much more work than he anticipated. "We'll soon see if it pays off," he asserted.

—Dick Richards

"What'll you have?" Senior Howie Wilkins makes extra spending money for himself by working in the 900 Room.

Providing information and answering the telephone at the Union desk is a vital work-study job.

College: Hazardous to your health?

Amidst all the confusion of learning my way around campus during freshman orientation, the one building that I remember entering for the first time is the college infirmary. My naive hopes of never having to cross that street again were all in vain, as I soon found out that college can be very hazardous to one's health.

Doesn't it seem that, at one time, there are more people maneuvering around campus on crutches and complaining of "flu" symptoms at Davidson than there are on General Hospital?

We all agree that the incredible amount of analyzing, figuring, translating, reporting, and organizing that we do and the lack of pure vegetation that we indulge in can lead to all sorts of mental and emotional disorders, problems, complexes, and malfunc-tions, but the amount of physical illness that is suffered here is astounding to anyone. (And people wonder why we have so many pre-meds!)

Tendonitis and sprained ankles are no fun to have, granted, but why do they occur with our students on an almost daily basis? We aren't climbing the Adirondacks — and not even very many stairs! And what about the phenomenal number of colds that we and our peers suffer through, consuming truckloads of Robitussin AC (the "good" kind with codeine) and entire forests worth of Kleenex? This is North Carolina, not the North Pole, for you non-English majors.

Perhaps we Davidson students are just exceptionally clumsy or maybe we just think so hard at times that we forget to pay attention to where we are going or what we are doing and just happen to walk off a curb abruptly or accidentally miss one or two steps . . .

The fact remains that no matter how hard one tries, almost everyone eventually pays a visit to the nostalgic Preyer Infirmary during the course of his Davidson career. Upon sight of the medicine cabinets and equipment, reminiscent of the 1940's, one is instantly swept back through time. But rest assured — with all of the experience the nurses have accumulated from caring for young patients, they are sure to get you back on your feet and back in class as soon as possible — unless, of course, you suffer from one of those incurable diseases such as Sophomore Slump or Senioritis . . .

—Patricia Lennon

Freshman Howie Moyes will think twice before hitting the ski slopes again.

A gathering of the wounded swaps war stories on the porch of Sentelle.

Getting to class is all the more difficult for the injured.

Safe Roads Act affects social atmosphere

The signs have changed. Those brightly colored, sometimes elaborate, sometimes cryptic signs put up around campus to announce band parties and discos simply read "SAE — After the game — 5 kegs" or "After disco — kegs — be there"; they now read "Party before you come" and "bring I.D."

Other signs aren't plastered all over campus, but they are there. The Fiji's bought a party bus to transport partiers back and forth from campus to their house. Eighteen-year-olds don't buy "liquid refreshment" at Food Lion and 7-Eleven anymore. Perhaps the change most noticed by the majority is the absence of pitchers in the 900 Room, designed to control who's drinking what. They're all signs — signs of the new Safe Roads Act of 1983 and the effect it has had on Davidson's already limited social scene.

The Safe Roads Act, passed by the North Carolina legislature in May of 1983 and taking effect October 1, was designed to reduce the number of alcohol-related driving accidents by raising the legal drinking age for beer and wine from eighteen to nineteen and strengthening the laws already on the books. Penalties for driving under the influence of alcohol are now stiffer, the sale or purchase of alcohol to or by a minor results in the loss of driver's license and/or fines, and a recent national law makes a bartender responsible for serving an already intoxicated person.

Most affected by the laws are, of course, freshmen who are still under nineteen. But the law is viewed by most Davidson students as an irritation, rather than a deterrent. Students must have an ID to get into the parties or into the 900 Room, and those whose ID's were so rudely stamped in scarlet "Under 19" must go to the trouble of obtaining and consuming their alcohol before going to the party, changing the age-old dilemma of making it home after the revelry to one of making it there at all.

A major protest raged on campus for several weeks after the decision to ban pitchers from the 900 Room, led by those who thought they were out of reach, the 19-year-olds and older.

Most protests against the law have been subtle, but the criticisms are present. Some people are incensed by the age change, claiming an 18-year-old who can vote or go to war and die like an adult can also make an adult decision about drinking. Others are offended by the obvious blame for the majority of drinking related accidents being placed on the 18-year-old age group. Some have even suggested that college students should be exempt from the laws "since we don't drive anywhere anyway!"

The criticisms usually stop at the age change. Most students agree with the rest of the world that alcoholism and related accidents must be curbed and that the laws were not strong enough.

Then there is still the shady connection between the new drinking laws and the Honor Code (or is it the Code Of Responsibility . . . as mentioned above, it's still shady . . .).

So, the signs are different now. But . . . the parties are there, the beer trucks are there, and the open bars are there . . . and more often than not, the freshmen are there.

—Christi Hayes

"May I see your I.D.?" Senior Jeff Tilbury greets party-goers at the door of the FIJI house.

Patterson court houses have begun checking I.D.'s and stamping hands in an effort to curtail underage consumption of alcohol.

NO MORE PITCHERS. The new drinking law has prohibited the 900 Room from selling beer in pitchers.

Freely flowing beer at campus parties is to become a rare sight if state legislators have their way.

Cars: a necessary luxury?

With the number of bicycles multiplying each year, the question concerning the necessity of cars on campus arises. Do students really need them? The answer is not as simple as it might appear. True, if cars were absolutely necessary then the ownership of one would be a requirement for entrance. It is not. Yet, a number of students bring cars to campus each year, and many have legitimate reasons for doing so.

The definition of car to many students is simply FREEDOM. Cars are the best preventative measure from the potential insanity which threatens pressured students. They are the remedy for Davidson overdose — a condition which seems to be more prevalent among upperclassmen than among freshmen. According to one student, "Freshmen don't need cars, because everything is so new to them. There is plenty to keep them entertained."

But what happens when the parties get old, the work piles up, and the grades plummet? What does one do when he feels more like a prisoner than a student? The answer for many is to "get away from it all."

Except for those with exceptional athletic ability, a bicycle is of little use when one wants to get away. Somehow a trip to the lake campus is just not far enough away to push problems from overburdened minds. The closest town offering anything in the way of entertainment, Charlotte, is 25 miles away — quite a hike for the less-than-well-conditioned student and not a real safe one at that! So, perhaps, the plea for the necessity of a car is not so irrational after all.

But students have additional reasons for bringing cars to school. For instance, cars are a definite convenience when one needs to run one of the 101 errands that come up during the course of the year. Everyone who has been stranded can relate to the humiliation felt in begging for a ride to Charlotte, especially when it is a less than convenient time to ask (i.e. exam week, Homecoming weekend, Hattie's Night, etc).

Furthermore, unless one is satisfied with bicycling to the local restaurants on Saturday nights, cars are a must when it comes to the dating scene. After all, how many campus movies and band parties can you take a date to before he/she starts wondering about your being (how can I put this nicely?) less than willing to spend a few dollars?!

For those students who lived off-campus, there is the necessity of getting to class, preferably on time, which requires some to own or to have access to a car. Others choose to argue that everything in Davidson is within walking distance. They need only try to get to an 8 o'clock class during winter term in sub-zero weather or in the midst of one of Davidson's infamous winter rains to change their minds.

Still, the reasons students voice for bringing cars to campus are not exhausted! Junior and senior pre-med students, as well as some Biology majors, need some means of transportation to get to courses which meet at the Mooresville or Charlotte hospitals. Education majors need cars to get to the various schools where they student-teach. Some bring cars because they live so close to home and can run home whenever they need money or a home-cooked meal. On the other hand, some have cars because they live so far away and have a hard time finding others "going their way." Then there are those who have home-town-honeys and find cars a necessity, although in some cases planes would be preferable. And of course, one must not exclude the fraternity brothers, who find cars necessary to make frequent roadtrips to neighboring schools. Cars are also convenient when going to basketball games at the Coliseum, raiding the nearby liquor store before a big party, picking up kegs, . . . need I go on?

Yet, there are a few students who neither have nor want cars on campus. According to one student, the inconveniences of worrying about maintenance, paying for gas, and finding a parking space negates any advantage of having a car. With everything she needs right here, she said she'd prefer to walk. But she and others like her are the exception and not the rule. Many students do have cars and a number of those who do not, wish they did. Perhaps cars are not an absolute necessity, but in this modern, time-conscious world we live in, they are as close to necessity as luxury can come.

What can you do with an English major?

After a long day of student teaching, seniors Beth Bryant and Stone Bynum are ready to relax.

Right: Seminars such as this one teach students both written and oral communication skills.

"I'm looking forward to it," Senior Catherine Finegan refers to her upcoming job as a copywriter in a Winston-Salem advertising agency.

Senior Ester Kim, who will be working for First Union National Bank, chats with senior Frances Palmer at a Rusk party.

Here's what!

"What are you going to do with it?" What English major has not been exasperated by this question coming from parents and friends? They cannot answer this question as easily as, say, premeds or chemistry majors can. But is the question a valid one? How can Shakespeare or Milton help a graduating senior get a job? Well, the Class of '84 is finding that there is a lot one can do with an English major.

By studying the masters of our language, English majors learn to express themselves clearly and easily. Catherine Finegan will be applying her communicative skills to her career in advertising. She has landed a job with The Daly Group, a Winston-Salem based advertising firm. Finegan values her background in English Literature for the writing skills that she has acquired. One of her most valuable experiences was an independent study in journalism which she designed with the English department. As part of the study she served as a copywriter with The Charlotte Observer.

Ester Kim, another senior English major, will be working for First Union National Bank, one of the largest financial institutions in the South. She will serve in their corporate lending department. Kim did not decide to major in English until late in her junior year. Originally, she planned to attend medical school and thought that an English major would look good on her application. When she changed her mind and began to interview with banks, she was worried that such a liberal arts degree would not be practical. But in her job interviews, she tried "stressing the value of communication skills." Apparently it paid off.

Some English majors pursue more unusual careers. Lanny Conley is choosing a "road less taken" by becoming a gourmet chef. He plans to study at either the Culinary Institute of America or the Johnson & Wales cooking school. His ambition is to eventually open his own restaurant. Why would a future cook choose to major in English? When he first came to Davidson, he was not sure of a career path and heard that an English major was good for people who did not know what job they would eventually choose. "You can do so many things with it," Conley explained.

He seems to be right about that. Brian Butler plans to continue his study at the University of Chicago. Suzanne Dickey hopes to go to London and write for an English music magazine, such as Melody Maker. Some will go to law school. Others will get teaching jobs. Others will get married. But few regret majoring in such an "impractical" subject.

EVENTS

"I shall be content if those shall pronounce my history useful who wish to be given a view of events as they really happened, and as they are very likely to repeat themselves."

Thucydides, Historia

Kalenkhov (Scott Myers) mumbles to Grandpa (Jeff Mann) about their visitor (Ross Holt).

Cold cream, powder, and hairspray clutter the dressing table as Forrest Williams and Jean Shepherd apply the finishing touches to their costumes.

The entire Sycamore household and their guests pause for prayer.

Famous quote for the day: "You Can't Take It With You."

Not only is this quote true, but it is the title of the nostalgic three-act 1930's play by Moss Hart and George S. Kaufman that the drama department presented this fall. Under the expert direction and design of Joseph Gardner, along with the help from everyone in the drama department, this production was extremely well-received by an audience of students, staff, and citizens of Davidson. On this special occasion of the drama department's 20th anniversary (1963-1983), many DC Theatre alumni returned to attend one of the performances.

The storyline of the play, a witty piece with lovable characters and an underlying message, is concentrated on a somewhat wacky family that has devoted their lives to . . . well — just that: life, the sheer enjoyment of it. The conflict arises when young Alice Sycamore, played by Jean Cooper, one of the "normal" members of the family falls in love with Tony Kirby, played by Forrest Williams. Kirby is a young man at the office where she works, and he just happens to be the boss' son. His parents are invited to dinner at the Sycamores' after the young couple's engagement, but the Kirbys, Ross Holt and Anne Goodwin, arrive on the wrong night, much to the surprise of the Sycamore family and of dismay to Alice. The ending is, of course, happy, and the long round of applause at every performance was certainly well deserved.

It is fascinating that over half of the cast members were making their debut in the DC drama department and that they overcame this minor obstacle and made the play such a success. The actors, make-up, costumes, props, set, and everything else that contributed to the play's positive reception were well-thought out and seemed to "click" at the performances.

Grandpa Martin Vanderhof, portrayed by Jeff Mann, added much of the humor to the piece with his far-fetched but almost always veritable philosophies. Such as — "You Can't Take It With You."

Spring play earns raves

The Davidson College Theatre did something slightly different this spring: Rupert Barber chose a play with female leads. The play, Scenes and Revelations by Elan Garonzik, tells the story of four sisters in Lancaster, Pennsylvania and their attempts to join the westward movement. Since the time period spans 1888 to 1894, the only way respectable women could move West was with a man, but only one of them goes West. She later returns to her Lancaster home after going mad.

The play possesses another interesting twist — it does not tell the story chronologically. Each of the 19 scenes raises a number of questions — some of which are answered throughout the following scenes. In this way, the audience does not have a complete picture until the end of the last scene when the four sisters give up their dream to go west. Instead, they sell the farm and go back to Manchester, England to take over their uncle's textile industry.

The jumbling of scenes created a challenge for the actors. Often a very emotional scene would precede a light, happy scene, making the switch even more difficult. Dr. Barber had the actors rehearse the play in chronological order before they did it the way Garonzik wrote it. This helped the actors discover how their character developed.

Joe Gardner's set for Scenes and Revelations was an attempt to give the feel of the new industrial age and to allow for rapid scene shifts. The scene shifts were accomplished primarily by lighting. The department bought some new lighting instruments with this show in mind. The lights helped to set the mood and the location.

Scenes and Revelations received rave reviews from The Charlotte Observer, WDAV, and the Davidsonian. Whoever missed this production missed one of Davidson's best.

The FIXX comes to Davidson

SAVED BY ZERO. Can anything save Davidson from being forever confined to musical performances by relative unknowns in the rock industry? Sure, the Police came here a few years ago, but at that time "Sting" was only something irate bees did. And after the Go-Go's snagged a spot on Saturday Night Live, the Union budget couldn't afford the resulting inflation. So how did it happen that a band who has had several Top 40 hits and two successful albums played a concert at Davidson? It wasn't because of careful planning or sharp negotiation — nothing of the sort. It was more likely by chance: saved by zero. A connection in the right place — i.e., Scott Huie, who toured with the Fixx this summer — and a fortunate geographic coincidence — Davidson being more or less en route from the Police/Fixx performances in Atlanta to their Saturday night concert in Knoxville — brought one of the most widely known rock acts Davidson has ever seen to Love Auditorium on November 4, 1983.

STAND OR FALL. Surely with such a drawing card as the Fixx and an admissions price of five dollars for students, the concert would be Standing Room Only. Wrong. Even with ticket sales opened to the general public for only $8.50 per seat, Love Auditorium did not sell out. But the crowd was big enough and was visibly excited about the show. Rumors of a surprise appearance by the Police generated additional anticipation and were ironically confirmed when the Davidson cops walked onstage amid screams, much applause, and the whole auditorium on its feet.

RED SKIES AT NIGHT. The Fixx gave a very professional performance, complete with imaginative lighting effects and excellent live renditions of their studio cuts. They performed nearly all the songs released on their two albums, and even played "One Thing Leads To Another" again as an encore. Vocalist Cy Curnin held the audience's attention through most of the show, while he seemed mostly interested in staring at his own hands while they tried to hit him and strangle him — terminal hand fetish. Curnin was backed by Jamie West-Oram (lead guitar), Adam Woods (drums), Rupert Greenall (keyboards), and Alfie Agies (bass guitar). Even after four encores, the audience wanted to hear more, but the group had run out of time and songs, so they said good night to most of the campus.

ONE THING LEADS TO ANOTHER. But Davidson hadn't seen the last of the Fixx yet. The lucky souls who happened to attend KA's "After the Fixx" party got the chance to meet the members of the band and talk to them briefly.

SIGN OF FIRE. Although the group lacked a little stage presence and flare, the concert was a memorable one, and the intimacy of Love Auditorium was an excellent atmosphere in which to experience them. The Fixx shows a lot of promise musically and has already made a terrific entrance into contemporary music. They don't stick with the mainstream; they're a few steps ahead of it. They are a young band with imagination and ingenuity. In the coming years when people are paying $15 plus to see them in 20,000-seat arenas, tell your friends you saw them for five bucks at Davidson College way back when . . .

Thompson Twins: worth the wait

The spectacular Thompson Twins light show haloes lead singer Tom Bailey.

"This is a stick up." Musician-vocalist Alannah Currie clowns with a Davidson policeman.

It's a Saturday night at Davidson. The stage is set in Love Auditorium. Students wait in a long line that starts at the door, winds down the stairs, and ends at the Chambers' north door. The auditorium opens, and the students find their seats. Anticipating another great concert like the Fixx, the crowd begins to get excited.

As the wait continues, the audience grows restless. The students amuse themselves by talking about past concerts and by pointing out the people from Charlotte among the crowd—easily spotted by their bizarre dress and hairstyles. At 9:20 the house lights dim. The Thompson Twins begin what is to be a fantastic performance.

When the lights go out, purple beacons glare into the audience. The backup musicians — playing bass, drums, keyboards, and synthesizer — set the mood. From either side of the stage come Alannah Currie, the fun loving blond, and Joe Leeway, the mellow bongo player. Alannah writes the lyrics, and Joe is the one to thank for the creativity of the live shows. Rounding out the group is Tom Bailey, the lead singer.

By the end of the first song, the audience was hypnotized. The fantastic light and stage show entranced the audience like a rock video. The crowd became a part of a fantastic world filled with magentas, grass greens, bright yellows, sky blues, eerie purples, and fiery reds. The three lead performers worked well together musically and visually.

The performers used headphone microphones so that they could go from instrument to instrument as they harmonized to "Lies", "Doctor, Doctor", "Love on Your Side", "We Are Detective", "Sister of Mercy", and their hit "Hold Me Now". Even after two encores the audience wanted more. But the show had to end, and the Davidson students had to leave this world of bright colors and haunting harmonies and go back into the balmy Saturday night filled with court parties and discussions of the concert.

Speakers address diverse topics

Davidson has been the site of a diverse profusion of speakers this year, presenting topics which range from CIA operations to Irish poetry, from a national industrial policy to science fiction, and from "fire in our bones" to "Kudzu." They were all reputable in their fields, whether they came to educate or to entertain, and represented a wide variety of interests concerning worldly awareness or cultural achievements.

Former agent for the CIA John Stockwell enlightened students on the correct operations of this often misunderstood organization. He revealed numerous incidents in which the CIA lied to the American public and to Congress. He also related the organization's active role in bombings, assassinations, and wars, and suggested that citizens involve themselves in protests of these activities.

This year's Reynolds Lecturer Barry Bluestone addressed economic problems in the U.S. today and proposed a national industrial policy as one step toward remedy-ing the situation. Bluestone is the author of The Decentralization of America and based his speech on the research he conducted while writing it.

Dr. Charles King forced participants in a race seminar to reevaluate their often prejudiced attitudes about race, often with surprising results. He tried to convey the black experience by showing the isolation forced upon the race and by intimidating members of a student/faculty panel. He spent three hours in this part of the program, directing a variety of hard-hitting questions at the panel and severely limiting response options. By the end of the seminar, students and faculty had a greater understanding of the black point of view and recognized attitudes which they previously had not considered prejudiced at all.

Other speakers this year provided a slice of culture. Irish poet Paul Muldoon rendered selections of his verse for a group of about 100 people in the Union. His poetry explored love and childhood memories which he portrayed in a very realistic manner. Combined with these topics were elements of the violence inherent in the nature of humankind.

Literature of a different genre was presented by science fiction writer Jack Chalker. Chalker is a highly acclaimed author of many books. One of the most popular is titled Midnight at the Well of Souls. Chalker emphasized the importance of science fiction's ability to address serious questions more freely than other forms of writing.

NC native Doug Marlette visited Davidson again this year and shared his experiences in the cartoon business. Marlette is a nationally-syndicated cartoonist for The Charlotte Observer and created the strip "Kudzu." He demonstrated his methods for drawing political caricatures. He also explained how the comic strip "Kudzu" was based on his own experiences growing up in the South.

Strong turnout pleases officers

In the SGA elections held March 27, John Laughlin defeated Warren Gould for president and Beadsie Woo defeated Jay Gaither for the office of vice-president. The turnout for the election was strong, with 200 more students voting than last year.

Newly elected Laughlin foresees a larger role in campus affairs for students. He also hopes to see the SGA play an important role in smoothing out the transition between the college's presidents. Laughlin thinks that the SGA can give President Kuykendall a good idea of student opinion on most issues.

Both Laughlin and Woo stated that athletics and race relations were issues to be studied in the upcoming year. Laughlin sees a need for more funds for minor sports and a need for a stronger football program. Woo would like to see the SGA and the BSC work with the RACE committee to pinpoint racial problems. Both Woo and Laughlin are concerned with the high attrition rate of black students at Davidson.

In addition to the offices of the president and vice president, the elections for class senators were held. The senior class elected Warren Gould as president; Atondra Williams and John Peebles are the senior class senators. Edward Hay is the junior class president and serves with junior senators Jennifer Gotto and Frank Hobart. Mark Sandy is the sophomore class president and Chet Barksdale and Shel Robinson are the class senators. The office of SGA parliamentarian is held by Christi Johnson.

The new officers were pleased with the strong voter turnout. All expressed a strong commitment to representing the views of the student body.

Artists Series brings culture to Davidson

"Drama — Dance — Music — Entertainment." The 1983-84 Artists Series flyers said it all. With the helpful advice of a student committee, C. Shaw Smith and Anne Parker arranged for talented performers to bring their magic to Davidson.

September ushered in the North Carolina Shakespeare Festival and an inspired performance of "Othello". Proving the old maxim "the show must go on," an understudy substituted for an ailing Othello. Eric Zwemer as Iago was a crowd pleaser and, along with the supporting cast, he bolstered the inexperienced lead.

Strains of Yugoslavian folk songs filled the October night as the dance troupe Frula shared their energy with an enthralled audience. Thirty-six performers displayed their native culture through two and one-half hours of song and dance. Traditional costumes, music, and esprit de corps lent vivacity to the show.

World-renowned pianist Claude Frank performed in January. A Yale faculty member, Frank's talents as a teacher and as a performer are in great demand. His repertoire of classical and modern pieces captivated the audience. Chopin's "Fantasie in F Minor" and Ginestra's "Danzas Argentinas" displayed Frank's diversity, and his performance earned him a standing ovation.

The final event in the Series was an April visit from the Guarneri String Quartet. Their excellent renditions of classical pieces drew an appreciative crowd.

Season ticket holders saw all four performances at a bargain rate, and tickets were available at the door for those who chose to attend selected events.

A later development brought "The Mikado" to the Davidson stage. The London Savoyards honored Davidson with a special performance in return for the time they spent here in rehearsal for their American tour. Their professional style energized the Gilbert and Sullivan score.

Homecoming remembered

It happened around 11:00 p.m. one brisk autumn evening. I had been lounging in my pink chiffon robe with matching pink satin pumps, savoring the taste of a sparkling white wine and reading Sonnets From the Portuguese when the knock came.

I opened the door. The man standing before me in a white cotton suit and a panama hat said, "The name's Nostalgia, sweet heart." He handed me a long-stemmed red rose and continued, "Here's looking at you, kid."

Nostalgia brushed past me into my room, poured himself a stiff drink, and said, "Tomorrow, Oct. 28, 1983, 7:00 p.m. Be here. Be ready." He set down the empty glass, kissed me on the cheek, and then left. I was shocked, but I admit, somewhat titillated.

Unfortunately, I awoke to find myself in Richardson dorm dressed not in pink chiffon but a plaid nightshirt. My date for the weekend was no Humphrey Bogart, but he would be here soon. I dressed quickly.

All the houses on Patterson Court had parties that evening. We went to a party at PiKA then to PAX pub. Later, we went to the 900 Room in the Union and listened to Flight 108, the jazz group directed by WBCY disc jockey Fred Storey. We drank, we danced, we laughed, we said goodnight. I was disappointed. Nostalgia had stood me up.

The following day at 2:00 p.m., my date arrived to go with me to the football game: Davidson vs. Furman. The first half dragged. Davidson was losing. I was bored. Finally, half-time and the time to crown the queen arrived. I watched my roommate, Tricia Ives, the KA representative take her place. I felt another wave of emotion as I watched Kitty Dudley, the SAE representative receive the crown from Mr. Legerton, head of the Alumni Association. Kitty had been on my freshman hall. I glanced down the stands and saw Reaves Robinson, our hall counselor. I sighed.

"What's the matter, kid?" I heard a low voice beside me say. I jumped. "Where's my date?" I asked. "Don't worry about him sweetheart," came the reply. I watched the rest of the game with contentment. Davidson still lost. When it ended, I realized my real date had returned. "Miss me?" he asked. I smiled.

Later that evening we went to the school sponsored dance in The Commons. The Spongetones, a 60's sound, Beatles-oriented group, were playing. My date and I danced. Across the crowded room, I saw him. Nostalgia leaned against the wall, his hand in one pocket, his hat slanted slightly downwards to one side. "Yesterday" had been playing. Walking towards me, Nostalgia threw off his hat, pulled me close and said "Play it again, Sam." He did. We danced.

"Everyone has a boyfriend and his name is Nostalgia," I thought.

A weekend with Mom and Dad

You are walking back to the dorm one typical Friday morning when a friend stops by to say "hi" and asks an innocent question: "When are your parents coming?"

"What?!" you ask as your mouth drops. "Oh my gosh, I completely forgot that it's Parent's Weekend!" You run into the dorm and up the stairs.

Surveying the mess that is your side of the room, you know it is another day to bag the old Humes. The first matter of business is a general cleaning up (or shovelling out, as it may be). Mom and Dad will probably want to see the new carpet they paid for, so throw all the clothes in the closet, shove the papers into the desk, and junk the remains of last night's late-night snack into the wastebasket. After you can see the furniture, then check through the room to see if there are any magazines, pictures, or empty bottles of liquor that Mom and Dad shouldn't see.

Inevitably, your parents will show up before you are ready. You'll greet them in your old sweats with a hole in the knee. Dad will be in a suit and tie. Mom will be in pumps, a skirt, and a jacket. Dad will first comment about your sense of style or complain about why they even bother to buy you new clothes. After a hug, Mom will ask if you have been eating right and getting enough sleep, and you'll answer, "Oh, Mom!" to officially begin the weekend.

Walking across the campus you realize you haven't seen so many people dressed up since your cousin's wedding. You're surprised to find out that John actually owns a suit and that Jill has legs under her blue jeans. It's fascinating to see where Dave got his blue eyes and Mary got her red hair. Looking at their parents, you can picture your friends twenty years from now.

The weekend is full of ways to entertain Mom and Dad. The fall production, You Can't Take It With You is terrifically funny, and Mom and Dad love it. It seems everyone shows up for the soccer game to watch Davidson tie Appalachian State 0-0. Receptions for parents are held outside where the bitter cold makes everyone wish they had worn a warmer coat.

Going out to dinner is one of the best things about Parent's Weekend. You can go to restaurants in Charlotte you normally can't afford and eat as much as you can at Dad's expense. Other enterprising students get Mom and Dad to take them shopping in Charlotte.

"My parents must really miss me," one package-laden student is heard to say upon returning. "They have already forgotten how much I asked for before I left for Davidson!"

But the most outstanding event of Parent's Weekend did not involve Mom and Dad. Somehow you manage to give Mom and Dad an early send-off in order to see the Fixx with your friends. The Fixx are well worth hearing, no matter how many times your parents said, "Rock music is trash."

First Jim Hoskins presents "the Police". The crowd goes wild only to boo the campus police off the stage. Scott Huie opens up with some tunes, a bad joke, and a toilet seat around his neck. The Fixx are greeted by an enthusiastic audience. The crowd has a lot of fun dancing and making hand signals along with the songs. The band was loudly applauded and played several encores.

"It was a fantastic concert," you report to Mom and Dad the next morning at breakfast and add jokingly "You should have been there."

Dad looks up from his paper and says "Humpf!" Mom sips her coffee and smiles, "That's nice dear."

Well, you think, if you can't go home on a chilly November weekend, home might as well come to you. You smile at your parents and see that it has.

Winter term respite: MIDWINTERS

As the leaves continue to fall and the skies open up and bring forth the cold winter rains so common to Davidson, students scurry about campus in between classes, dorms, and the library, while battling the winter term blues. The wind blows, forever threatening to suddenly turn one's umbrella inside out or snatch one's notebook away, only to turn around and scatter the contents from Chambers to Irwin. The dry leaves rustling on the ground seem to be saying in their restlessness (as echoed by so many students' thoughts), "When will spring arrive?"

Well, now that spring has sprung and the dead leaves have all been blown away to Mooresville, I look back at winter term and try to remember the good things. Although I did manage, like so many others, to catch the infamous "Davidson flu" exactly one week before midterms (putting me behind schedule by about one month . . . nothing unusual), I do remember a particular event that weighs well in my memory — Midwinters Weekend. That is, to many, the one thing that we most look forward to during that long post-Christmas-seven-week stretch (other than Spring Break, of course).

For most of the campus the activities begin on Thursday of the Big Weekend, with parties on the court to gradually pull people out of hibernation. But technically the weekend does not get rolling until after every book has been closed on Friday afternoon (for those few who choose to attend classes). Suddenly, the word "study" is spelled with four letters and students seem to come alive once again, whereas 2 days before, the campus looked like an excerpt from the "Thriller" video.

The 900 Room always provides enjoyable entertainment on both nights of the weekend for those who wish to steer clear of the court parties; I can remember hearing nothing but positive feedback from everyone about Gene Cotton, the lively folk singer. But seeing as my date for the weekend was a fraternity member, we attended the semi-formal formalities in Charlotte after the traditional stop for dinner at a swank restaurant. Of course, we got lost in Charlotte for about 20 minutes and missed our reservation, but it wasn't too uncomfortable with all 6 of us jammed into a 4-person car — at least we stayed warm and we all became close friends rather quickly! The rest of the evening remains a blur: dancing, talking, dancing, drinking, dancing, and having about 200 photographs shot from every angle possible by a picture-happy photographer. As we crowded back into the car, once again, all I remember is being hit with a sudden case of claustrophobia and then sinking into a dream-filled sleep on the way home.

Saturday night was the campus-wide dance in The Commons, and since someone's "brilliant" idea fell term to classify the dances as casual was successful, the occasion was truly "campus wide."

As the pictures fade, the memories remain clear, and now I can look forward to at least one aspect of winter term for the next couple of years. After all, it doesn't rain every weekend . . .

The sun attends Spring Frolics

Has spring really sprung? Finally, it seems so — enough, at least, to make the last campus-wide Big Weekend of the year seem worthwhile. That is to say that “good ole” Davidson has experienced — as ironic as it sounds — A BREAK IN TRADITION by the miraculous absence of rain for Spring Frolics Weekend, held on April 12-14.

For the first time in years, the planned outdoor activities were actually held outdoors — and just when we were getting used to cramming jugglers, dancers, bands, and balloons, not to mention the students — in the Student Union. Could it be that this phenomenon was brought on because the weekend fell on Friday the 13th? Whatever the reason, the activities were mellow and enjoyable, especially with the extra lift added by the weather.

Officially, the weekend started on Thursday with court parties and a 900 Room disco, but most people waited until Friday afternoon to set aside all books and really party. For many, Friday's activities were the highlight of the weekend with an outdoor (as opposed to “outdoors in the 900 Room”) concert at the stadium with bands Right Profile and Stoneshow. Right Profile opened the concert with new and original music that contrasted with the gyrating Mick Jagger look-alike and the imitation Rolling Stones music by Stoneshow. Students relaxed on scattered towels, half-listening as they sipped on beer and worked on the tans that they had long ago lost to winter term.

Deciding to skip the 900 Room's movie “Blues Brothers”, my date and I had dinner Friday evening at the standard-big-weekend-restaurant-in-Charlotte: Barley and Rye. This restaurant, famous for its endless salad bar, also caters to prom-night clients, who were out in full force on this particular night, making some of us feel nostalgic and all of us feel a little older . . . and wiser. Upon our return to campus my date and I danced at his fraternity's band party before heading home, ironically somewhat earlier than on a week-night of studying.

Saturday arrived, a bit cloudier than Friday, but warm and, more importantly, dry. The “carnival” in front of Chambers entertained those who had not gone to the lake. The “Butterflyman” was amusing and talented as he joked and juggled; the newly formed Davidson Dance Troupe performed their creative dance to “Beat It”; the Station Break Race was made more challenging by the added factor of campus rental roller skates, which would have definitely been “interesting” inside the Union had it rained.

That night, while the PIKA's shriveled up in their rented hot tub, “Steve Bassett and the Soule Survivors” had their own beach party in the Commons.

Foregoing the one a.m. performance by Chip Franklin in the 900 Room, my date and I once again parted early, sharing many fond memories of a unique weekend with diverse yet enjoyable activities. The rare appearance of somewhat clear skies over Davidson and the apparent authenticity of the arrival of Spring made the weekend all the more memorable.

Students honored at Convocation

An assembly of the graduating class. The first wearing of the caps and gowns. Honors for outstanding merit. Sound familiar? It should sound like Fall Convocation, but if this doesn't ring a bell, you are not alone. Each year a certain number of seniors choose not to attend. Why? Such formalities as graduation attire, a processional, and presentations of awards with names over three words long could intimidate the biggest B.M.O.C. The Goodwin-Exxon Awards, Superior Cadet Awards, the Omicron Delta Kappa Recognitions, the Thomas Jefferson Award, and Alumni Association Award—it's all pretty impressive.

The Goodwin-Exxon Award, established in 1930, is awarded annually to a sophomore, a junior, and a senior who display outstanding levels of character, sportsmanship, and consideration for others. The Department of the Army each year presents the Superior Cadet Award to a member of each class participating in Military Science instruction who demonstrates general excellence in that department. The Alumni Association Award goes annually to the sophomore who achieved the highest grade point average in his class during his freshman year. Omicron Delta Kappa is a national society for leadership in athletics, academics, social and religious activities, publications, and cultural activities such as forensics, music, drama, etc; the society recognizes students demonstrating excellence in each of these five areas. The Thomas Jefferson Award is received by the Davidson College professor "who through personal influence, teaching, writing, and scholarship promotes the high ideals of Jefferson and who has given of himself or herself generously and well beyond the normal call of duty." Finally, the recipients of Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges are determined by the students' academic performance, participation and leadership in curricular and extracurricular activities, service to the school, citizenship, and future potential for achievement. As if all this were not enough, they had to go and establish the Herman Brown Professorship of Natural Sciences in 1983. Dr. John Williamson became the first recipient of this award. He spoke at Convocation on "Science as a Liberal Art."

In addition to the awards presentations and Dr. Williamson's address, the Convocation program also incorporated an invocation given by Doug Ammar, President of the Y-Student Service Corps, a welcoming speech given by the President of the Class of 1984, Pat Woodward, and a benediction given by the College Chaplain Charles Summers. The Davidson College Wind Ensemble provided the music for the Processional and Recessional and the College Concert Choir sang an anthem, "Exultate Deo" by Frances Poulenc, in the middle of the ceremony as an interlude before the presentations. Overall, the program was varied and well-balanced and made this year's Convocation quite enjoyable.

Most seniors do decide to attend Fall Convocation, but obviously the formality doesn't appeal to everyone. These ceremonies possess a strong flavor of pomp and circumstance, and everyone knows how stuffy awards programs can get sometimes. One can hardly blame the non-attenders if a beautiful November day appeals more to them than an indoor ceremony in caps and gowns. But tradition being what it is, and the necessity for such programs of recognition being, well, recognized, Fall Convocation is in no danger of passing from the scene at Davidson. The rites of fall will always be open to students, but to some they shall remain only a second-hand element of that elusive phenomenon known as the "Davidson Experience."

Will Terry congratulates Mary Fant on winning the Goodwin-Exxon Award for character and service.

Director William Lawing reads the Davidson Wind Ensemble for the processional.

T.C. Price Zimmerman presents Greg Murphy with the Sandy Black Memorial Award for premedical students.

Guest speaker Edmund D. Pellegrino shares his views on medical ethics.

Spring Convocation served as the setting for the highlight of the alumni weekend medical symposium titled Health Professions and the Liberal Arts. Dr. Edmund D. Pellegrino delivered the convocation address on Medical Ethics and the Liberal Arts. Pellegrino is the director of the Kennedy Institute of Ethics and Carroll Professor of Medicine and Medical Humanities, Georgetown University. He stressed the importance of a Liberal Arts education as preparation for modern medicine's many ethical problems.

Excitement mounted as awards were presented to outstanding students. Susan Hill-ton received the Rebecca E. Stimson Award for women's athletics and leadership. The Tommy Peters Award went to Kenny Wilson, again for athletics and leadership. Pat Donley, Jr. earned the Eumenean Literary Society Award by exemplifying the motto "It is beautiful to cultivate the mind." The Charles Malone Richards Award, which goes to a student active in the religious community, was given to Sarah Speed. The Agnes Sentelle Brown Award for personality and intellectual ability went to Hunter Roddey. Beth Maczka received the George L. Gladstone Memorial for service and leadership. English professor Cynthia Lewis was the recipient of the Omicron Delta Kappa Teaching Award.

Class of '84 and Johnston say farewell

Pat Woodward, senior class president, and Leland Park lead the Class of '84 to the graduation exercise. The ceremony was held in front of the Dana Science building.

Tears and hugs say it best. Shannon Anderson congratulates a friend after the ceremony.

(Taken from The Charlotte Observer)

Under a canopy of oaks and threatening clouds, 330 men and women closed their hands around Davidson College diplomas Sunday morning and opened the door to the future.

Most of the 3,000 folding wood chairs were filled at 10:15 a.m. as two columns of students in black gowns and caps proceeded across Davidson's front lawn and around the crowd assembled under trees near the Dana Science Building.

Sunday's 75-minute ceremony was four years in the making. Each cherished seat among the 330 cost roughly $40,000 in tuition, fees, books, room and board.

The seats symbolized achievement. For summa cum laude graduate Eric Fink of Faith, it was four years of straight A's; for magna cum laude graduate Katie Dagenhart, it was national prominence in field hockey and a study trip to Greece and Italy; for athlete Kenny Wilson of Fayetteville, it was winning the 1984 Tommy Peters Award for the athlete who best exemplifies the Davidson spirit.

(After graduation,) Hunter Monroe of Chapel Hill, Davidson College's 21st Rhodes Scholar, will fly to Senegal for a conference on economic planning in Africa. A computer model he helped create may someday bring agricultural self-sufficiency to struggling Third World nations. But Sunday, Monroe spoke of his greatest Achievement. "I think it's about to happen," he said, referring to graduation.

The ceremony was brief and dignified; opening prayer, hymn and Scripture readings; then, the awards.

Student Award for outstanding service to college and community was Douglas Ammar of Charleston, W. Va. Among the achievements of Ammar — a white — was the founding of Racial Attitudes Concerning Everyone (RACE), dedicated to better race relations at Davidson.

Also honored Sunday were James McMillan, U.S. district judge for the Western District of North Carolina, who received an honorary doctor of laws degree; Donald Shriver Jr. of New York, a 1951 Davidson graduate and now the president of Union Theological Seminary, who received an honorary doctor of humane letters degree; and Genevieve Hopkins, a Davidson resident and organizer of a hot-lunch program for the elderly in northern Mecklenburg County, who also received an Algernon Sydney Sullivan Award.

There was no commencement speech, a Davidson tradition, but as Interim President Frontis Johnston handed out diplomas and a small crowd of photographers clicked away, graduates offered their own messages: clenched fists raised in victory; a loud "Whoo-hoo!"; a cap raised skyward.

The ceremony closed with singing of the Davidson alma mater, and as the college wind ensemble began the postlude, scores of laughing students tossed their caps into the low tree branches.

Church bells peeled, and the organized ceremony dissolved into a mass of hugging students and parents, impromptu photo sessions and tearful goodbyes.

For Davidson College's class of '84, Sunday was a day of formality, a time of insanity, a day of sobriety and a time of revelry.

It was a day to remember.

Then . . .

No one walked on the grass. Freshmen wore beanies, ROTC was not optional. Socks were white, shirts were starched. The M & M Soda Shop was the new restaurant in town. The "new" library, a large four-story building across from the Science building, had replaced the small two-story library next to Little Dormitory. E. H. Little (his name sounds familiar) was heading for retirement.

Big weeks

Young men found lodging in other dorms, and the girls (they were all imports in those days) took over Belk. For three weeks ends every year, Davidson went coed.

For entertainment, Jackson Court (and later, an off-campus Patterson Court) sponsored dances and house parties, spotlighting the stroll, the bunny hop, and the new music: rock and roll.

Vail Commons

While Senior Margaret Ervin eyes the barbecued ribs, freshmen enjoy the Commons' relaxed atmosphere.

Four years ago, the freshman class of 1980 wandered down to Bailey and Richards in search of a decent meal. The entrées, served so cheerfully by ARA Slater's delightful employees, were usually inedible and always unidentifiable.

The oft-asked question "Hey, what is that brown stuff?" only added to the atmosphere of general disgust and discontent.

By fall term of the following year, the Vail Commons had been erected.

Pritchard's staff prepared to open its doors for incoming freshmen and independents.

Diversity, a board bill competitive with bills on the Court, and absolute impartiality attracted both freshmen and upperclassmen.

The Commons offers better meals, more entertainment, and a much more pleasant atmosphere than Richards and Bailey ever did: salad bars, spud bars, barbecues, steak on Saturday, semi-formals, live entertainment, and (worth mentioning) all-you-can-eat at every meal.

The freshman class of 1980 was the last class to "experience" Slater; however, attitudes toward all-freshman eating options have not changed.

Despite its country-club ambience, the Commons lacks a social program competitive with that of the houses on Patterson Court.

For this reason, among others, Patterson Court continues to draw a majority of each class during self-selection.

Senior Kenny Wilson joins other independents and freshmen on the Commons Terrace for an afternoon meal and band party.

Senior Bill Crone, here, dressed and ready for a theater performance, is one of many ATO seniors seeking membership in a new eating house

ATO Members gather for the last supper. Senior Richard Barber, house president, salutes his fellow sheep

In the fall of 1983, ATO served its last supper. The (infamous) black sheep of Patterson Court were forced to disperse for lack of funds and lack of members. The sheep had been fighting what some viewed as a losing battle for several years. ATO's "no rushing" policy and non-conformist reputation may have contributed to the decline in self-selection.

The demise of ATO leaves Davidson students with a few outlets for "uncommon" behavior. Who will enact the Ides of March? Who will serve ice cream with comet and beef stew toppings? Will we ever witness another duel on the patios of Patterson Court? Will SAE miss the house screams and the National Anthem? Most importantly, what will happen to the lost sheep? No one seems to know . . .

House members demonstrate mealtime antics for any and all dinner guests.

Black Student Coalition

The Black Student Coalition accomplished a great number of their goals this year. Primarily, the BSC is an organization that was developed to unite students at Davidson who are concerned about race relations. The organization's move onto Patterson Court has produced many positive effects. Most importantly, it has given the group a convenient place to convene for meetings or to simply mix and mingle in an effort to form stronger bonds of friendship.

The BSC participated in a number of activities this past year under the leadership of the following officers: President Stone Bynum; Treasurer Keith Ellis; Vice-President Janet Stovall; Secretary Gabriella Robinson; Publicity, Dana Lemmon; Special Events, Judy Harrell; Social Chairperson Atondra Williams; House Chairman Mark Gant; Recruiting/Orientation Chairman Dwayne Wright.

The BSC contributes a great deal to the school and deserves its share of recognition. In an attempt to arouse race consciousness among the students and faculty of Davidson, the BSC undertook numerous projects in 1983-84. Their activities included the following:

Dr. Charles King, Jr. Race Seminar—This speech was a key function in that the BSC attracted not only one of the best speakers on race today but also a large representation of blacks and whites from Davidson. "There is Fire in my Bones about this problem called Race," said Dr. King in his stirring lecture discussion. He spoke of discrimination among members of both races and attempted to open people's closed minds about their own prejudices. He believes that we are all guilty of racial prejudice to a certain extent and therefore, should similarly combine our efforts in an attempt to destroy racism from everyday life.

Harlem Nocturn—Representing a movement begun in Harlem, this dance/singing group performed at Davidson before a large audience displaying talents parallel to those who performed during the Harlem Renaissance when Jazz and the Blues were originating.

Video Taping of Events of Racism at Davidson—Video-Taped reenactments of racist actions at Davidson were a vehicle through which the BSC hoped to reach those on campus unaware of negative race relations. These video tapes were played in the Union for an entire week, available for all to see and to be made aware of racist problems at Davidson.

Basically, all of BSC's efforts this year concentrated on race awareness because the best way to move towards improved racial relations is for all parties to be well-informed about the subject. Other BSC activities included mixers and dinners with SAE and KA, a fashion show, Harvey Gantt speaking on Black politics and the effects on our culture, and numerous seminars with panels composed of BSC members to provide a debate/discussion atmosphere on one of today's most complex and threatening problems.

The BSC is concerned with race relations at Davidson and intends to do everything it can to provide a healthier environment for all people. With the full support of its members and the rest of the student body and faculty, the BSC hopes to increase black students enrollment, involvement, and contributions to the school and community.

Aubrey Humphries looks up from her carrel and takes a breather.

Emanonites Charles Wiley, Anne Lambert, and Ladson Brearley spend a rainy Saturday walking to raise funds for CROP.

As a house with diverse membership, Emanon has developed a varied social calendar, trying to plan events that both the house and the campus can enjoy.

Popular parties this year included a Studio 54 party in the fall, and a night of big band music with the Davidson Jazz Ensemble later in the year. A casino party, complete with roulette, blackjack, dice, and prizes, was a Midwinters hit. House members favored the movie parties held throughout the year, featuring such classics as The Seduction of Joe Tynan, The Blues Brothers, Young Frankenstein, and Raiders of the Lost Ark.

The "big event" weekends of Homecoming, Parents' Weekend, and Midwinters called for special traditions: Saturday Champagne Brunch (a banquet of eggs, ham biscuits, muffins, and fruit) was a stylish addition to weekend festivities. For a taste of foreign culture, the house looked to Elizabeth Smiley, Pam Steadman, and the cooks to plan and prepare a number of exotic menus. These dinners were usually preceded by representative hors d'oeuvres and drinks.

The institutions of Wednesday night ice cream and Friday cocktails flourished. Each term featured at least one cocktail party for the faculty, providing a chance for members to talk with their professors in a casual atmosphere.

Emanon offered its members an array of travel opportunities. They went hiking in Linville Gorge, and planned a weekend at Myrtle Beach and a day at Carowinds before the end of the year.

And what did these hardy souls do in their "spare time?" There was always time for a napkin fight after dinner, a foosball game, or a late night rendez-vous of bridge and spades players. Spring term saw the organization of not one, but two, volleyball teams for the IMAC co-ed league. Even exam week was an excuse for planning events, as bagel study breaks and the consumption of leftover beer ended each term.

As one of the remaining three co-ed houses left on the court, Emanon feels optimistic about its future. Emanon's president Sid Jones said, "Davidson's co-ed houses offer a unique social setting—allowing co-eds to interact without the social pressure of fraternities. Emanon plans to foster that type of atmosphere for many years to come."

—Gina Triplett

Succulent barbecued chicken, dirty rice, Mabel rolls, and green beans. These are the things of which dreams are made, and the privileged members of Fannie & Mabel's eating house are the only people who are lucky enough to have it prepared for them by the best cooks in North Carolina, Fannie Brandon and Mabel Torrence. Do not misunderstand! We are talking about the best barbecued chicken and rolls in the world. Yet this treasured delicacy is only one of the many fine things that F & M's enjoyed this year. Long remembered will also be everything from Reggae bands to break-dance competitions, from food snoos to the Sistine Basement, from Mellow Mondays to Motorcycle Mamas.

Fall and winter terms went well under the leadership of President Bev Hart, Vice-President Betsy Blake, treasurer Peter D. "Chip", "Ace", "Goodnewsbadnews", McMichael, social chairmen Jeff Holland and Bill Swift, and head waiter Mark Steiner. The most dangerous of the cabinet positions, however, is the kitchen manager. One bad decision about what type of meal the house might like and it's instant abuse. Bravely risking life and limb to plan meals for F & M were Sherri Schwenke and John Toler. Laudatory comments often heard during meals were "Positive," "Terrific," and "Is this the Dead?"

The social chairmen got the year off to a good start with a Saturday afternoon Reggae party featuring the group Sunfire. Although several bands played at F & M during the year, the most notable ones were Atlanta recording artists Love Tractor and Davidson's own Other Bright Colors, featuring F & M's Joe Jaworski. OBC played at Hattie's Night, which is the night for excess.

Spring term heralded the election of the new officers. Sherri Schwenke, having demonstrated her proficiency as a kitchen manager, was elected president. Her cabinet consists of vice-president Catherine Melton, treasurer Mark Steiner, social chairmen Dave "Party Guy" Resnik, and Paul "the P-man" Price, head waiter Boyd Blackburn, and kitchen managers Rachel Stewart and Dave Brown.

No graduating senior will ever be able to exactly reproduce Fannie and Mabel's delicious rolls in his own kitchen, but every F & M alumnus will remember the finest southern cooking available to man.

Phi Gamma Delta

The fraternity of Phi Gamma Delta, which lives in a Pizza Hut with purple doors, is a diverse yet tightly knit group, known informally as the Fijis. On any given weekend one could find Fijis at a Grateful Dead concert, playing a twenty-four hour volleyball game to benefit the community, or riding the purple bus around town.

One thing is certain—all Fijis go away from Davidson College with more than a degree. Although Fijis pride themselves on their number of campus leaders, they do not often let academics get in the way of a good party. Fiji parties are a tradition on campus, from the legendary "Mellow Mondays" to the popular "Strawberry Fields Party." The Fiji band parties, ranging from reggae to bluegrass to New Wave, are the talk of the campus. In the absence of band parties, weekend trips for the Fijis vary from mountain weekends to the annual "Fiji Island" at North Myrtle Beach.

When a Fiji cannot leave town on a weekend, he will probably be seen bright and early Saturday morning, working in some townperson's yard as a part of one of the weekly Fiji workdays. The Fijis also take weekly jaunts to the community center to play with the kids.

Whatever the extracurricular aspects, Fijis are proud to say that they consistently maintain the highest GPA of Davidson's fraternities. Getting to know the Fijis is easy, but putting a label on them is not.

Kappa Alpha's Sigma Chapter returned to campus this year with pride after having clinched its second consecutive J. Edgar Hoover Award for chapter excellence. The award this year was the only one given in the entire Kappa Alpha Order, based on the strong showing of Davidson's own Southern Gentlemen.

Without slowing down to allow such an award to swell its collective head, Sigma began a strong rush program as well as an outstanding record of social service activities. Many brothers engaged in projects and organizations such as Student Government, the Y, fund raising for Muscular Dystrophy, as well as a charity disco co-sponsored with the Black Student Coalition.

In addition, brothers, pledges, and guests enjoyed a wide variety of activities sponsored by the social committee. Along with mixers and the (in)famous "Over the Hump Parties," Sigma's social calendar was highlighted by groups like Zenon, The Surf, and The Voltage Brothers, who provided the tunes for the Midwinters bash at the Charlotte Marriott. Nevertheless, the KA social event of the year was Heritage Week, which the brothers celebrated in typical southern style with skeet shooting, a gold tournament, a pig picking, and the annual barn dance.

The active brothers of Sigma were not the only ones recognized this year, however. Mr. Charles McCrary, Sr. ('21) of Ashboro received KA's highest alumni award, the Knight Commander's Accolade. Meanwhile, the chapter continued its quest for excellence in a wide variety of activities on campus, from the clothes for Kenya drive to the IMAC basketball championship, won by the house team, Supreme Court. It was a banner year for the Southern Gents, who maintain a diversity of personality but a unity of purpose.

PAX

The Vail Commons opened in 1981, and ever since the future of Patterson Court has been uncertain. Eating houses have been forced to compete with the formidable college dining service. Some houses have not been able to survive. ETC was the first to fall. At the beginning of this year, the Fighting Sheep of ATO announced that they would close at the end of Fall term because of low membership. Other houses are also suffering from low membership. It seems that independent, co-ed eating houses might become a thing of the past.

But one house on the Court seems to defy the current trend. While other houses struggle for survival, Pax is thriving with 88 members. PAX's newly elected president attributes the club's success to a history of strong leadership from its executive board. Two years ago, president Lee McCormick led a very successful drive to recruit freshmen. President Drew Wells continued this effort.

What is it that attracts freshmen to Pax? Murray Simpson, 1984-85 president, believes that the club's "relaxed atmosphere appeals to a lot of students." Many of the members spend their afternoons at the house playing bridge and volleyball.

One advantage of high membership is financial stability, PAX has accumulated an impressive bank account and has also been able to spend a great deal on house improvements. This year the house purchased a new stereo system, a new television, a microwave oven, new living room furniture and a Casablanca ceiling fan as a finishing touch.

In addition to house improvements, PAX has managed to offer an attractive social program. The Spongetones appeared at PAX early in the year. Also, the social committee has experimented with some new ideas such as a Christmas "Formal" and a Mardi Gras party. And, of course, the hot tub is a favorite among all the members.

In spite of the success it has enjoyed, PAX must fight for survival like all the other independent houses on the court. Last year, PAX recruited 35 freshmen. This spring only 25 freshmen selected PAX. Simpson explains that the independent houses must work hard to compete not only with the Commons; the growing popularity of the women's eating houses is also a threat to PAX. But Simpson adds that competition can also serve as an advantage to indepen-

Pi Kappa Alpha

After losing a great senior class to graduation, the brothers of Pi Kappa Alpha took on the challenge of making this past year as great and successful as the previous one had been. And they, in their own right, succeeded.

The big event of the fall was the Annual Haunted House. Kimmel House, thoughtfully donated by its residents, was transformed into a hellish manse, chock full of ghouls, demons, and Patrick McMaster. A substantial amount of money was raised and donated to the Muscular Dystrophy Association. Other events Fall term included numerous rush parties and mixers with students of other colleges.

Winter term brought something new to PiKA. The first winter-pledge class in Beta Chapter's history began their sacred duties to become brothers. The idea of a winter-pledge class added refreshing variety to the house. The annual Casino Party during Mid-winter's Weekend brought Atlantic City southward and enjoyment to all who attended. The pledge class's New Year's Eve Party ended the term with such a good time that everyone boisterously anticipated spring term, hoping for more of the same.

One of Spring term's highlights was the Dream Girl Formal. After cooking steaks at the lake campus, everyone donned their best attire and enjoyed themselves at Gus' Original Forty-Niner.

Later in the term, PiKA and Warner Hall co-sponsored the band Sidewinder at the loading dock. The band entertained a large crowd with a variety of American rock, accompanied by the audience's cheers and screams for encores.

PiKA raised money for Davidson's interests in the Kenyan educational system with its third Kenya Jam. Thirty-two freshmen made up an outstanding pledge class this spring and their Beach Party culminated the term with a pig roast and dancing in the sand.

After a year such as this one, the brothers of Pi Kappa Alpha look ahead to 1985 with great anticipation.

Phi Delt is no longer Animal House. Nor is it KA, SAE, or any of the other Kelly green bastions of young Republicanism. Many a lazy afternoon has found the Delts fraternally engaged in emptying kegs as only the Delts can. Among the house's many scheduled social functions several events were stand-outs: the temporarily assumed social ace of the annual champagne party, the joyous and judicious Air Band party; the reverent homage paid to ancient Greece at the Toga Party; and the insanity of the Halloween Party. Delts know how to party, and the friendly manner in which they do so has endeared them to Patterson Court.

Delts have also fared well on Davidson's hallowed fields of play. Captains from the football, soccer, and baseball teams call the Delt house their own. Delts were no less spartan in IMAC competition with the Warden's Crew bringing a fierce new brand of contact volleyball to Johnston Gym. In the midst of their extra-curricular exploits, Delts haven't neglected the responsibilities of study assumed by each Davidson student.

With a strong pledge class and a Phi Delt brother as the new college president, Phi Delt's roots in Davidson have become firmer than ever. The future looks prosperous as the Delt house extends a friendly hand to Davidson College and the community. We invite you to visit.

Rusk

Are Dawna Coutant and Rives Balcom rushing a senior? Andrea Geyer is willing to cooperate.

"Welcome, freshmen!" Peggy Blount, Becky Waters, Vicki Vinturella, and Nadine Bennett celebrate the festive occasion of self-selection.

Sophomore Katie Oates defends Rusk: "We really do eat meat and potatoes once a week."

The eager freshmen who rushed over to Chambers in search of their Patterson Court destination were quite surprised at the computer printout posted outside the Deans' office. Self-selection attested to the overwhelming popularity of one house — Rusk. Over 80 girls (about half of the freshman girls) "shot-gunned" Rusk in 1984. With over 50 girls on the waiting list, suggestions for fitting more into the house ranged from buying more tables to enclosing the porch! In any case, how to handle such a large class of rising sophomores is one of the issues Rusk must deal with during the upcoming year.

Apparently the "salad" image didn't steer the freshmen away. It is true that Ruskies LOVE salad — the great number of Rusk girls at the Quincy's salad bar on weekends attests to this fact. Many freshmen claim the fun and friendly people at Rusk were the reason they joined. It could also be that when all these great people get together they throw FUN parties.

Rusk had great success hosting Skip Castro, the White Animals, Liquid Pleasure, and other bands. Mixers with other court houses included a "Pearl Harbor Day party", a champagne party, and a party at PB Scotts. Semi-formals were held in the fall and winter; Rusk's Senior Formal was the highlight of Spring Term.

Various activities were held to help freshmen get acquainted with the girls in the house, including Ladies' Lock-ins, a "Slumber" party, Friday Afternoon Clubs, a "Girls Just Wanna Have Fun" party, and the traditional Self-Selection Champagne party. A "Suitcase" party with an all-expense-paid trip to Myrtle Beach given away and a Luau with Warner Hall rounded up the year. But Rusk girls do want to have more than just fun — Rusk girls get involved. Service projects during the year stressed personal involvement. During Fall term the house decided to forego desserts two nights a week to give to the Gethsamane Program. A disco for the Florence Crittendon Home in Charlotte was held along with a Clothes Disco that required each person upon entering to donate an article of clothing to be given to the Charlotte Clothing Ministry. Rusk girls also participated in Davidson's Town Day and in the Care for the Earth program which planted trees in Haiti.

The past year at Rusk holds many memories for all the members — favorite meals, the rush for the food, humorous remarks at house meetings, memorable parties, and the even more memorable clean-ups. The 1983-84 year was a great one for Rusk, but even greater things are in store for the future.

Sigma Phi Epsilon

The 1983-84 school year was a very special one for the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity. They boasted a class of thirty-four pledges, the largest of the fraternities. Stephen MacMillan, president, said the large class "symbolizes a change in the fraternity." According to the president, the fraternity had achieved "greater respectability" on the campus and in the community. This quality, combined with a strong pledge program, accounts for the large addition to the group.

Other significant events in the fraternity include a switch to Vail Commons as the standard dining place. Most of Sig Ep's members are pleased with the decision.

Some tradition, though, does remain in the fraternity's social program. They had their annual "Champagne Pajama Party" which was again a success. Also, the "Fountain of Youth" and "Casino" parties attracted many to the house off campus. Perhaps the most interesting evening, though, was the "Nuclear Meltdown" which featured Mike Blake with a bag over his head impersonating a geiger counter. Many of these events were possible only through the efforts of the little sisters, a group of girls headed by Frances Palmer dedicated to the health and merriment of the fraternity's members.

The highlight of the social season was the formal held at Sharon View Country Club on March 17. There, the standard dress was not jeans but formal attire. Despite the seemingly subdued atmosphere, all who attended enjoyed themselves.

With a successful year behind them, Sigma Phi Epsilon hopes to continue the trend. Officers predict a promising 1984-85 year for the fraternity.

Snacking makes studying go faster. But Annie, who are you really thinking about?

And there was our FAVORITE dinner: curried chicken, sautéed broccoli, croissants, and chocolate silk pie . . . all over the tables, chairs, walls, windows, ceiling, not to mention our clothes. With the help of a Davidson fraternity, Warner Hall was properly initiated into Patterson Court dining rituals.

Yes, Warner Hall, alias Wappa Happa, has met the challenge of becoming a well-rounded Patterson Court member. We have a hefty social budget, managed very well by social chairmen Kathy Kookken and Nancy Fannin, assistant social chairmen Anne Rollins and Shelley Boulware, and treasurers Mary Griffin and Jean Shepherd. Some of the highlights of this year were a road trip to Washington and Lee, Lust Barge, Winter Formal with freshmen as our guests, self-selection Champagne Party (yes, we do stand on the furniture), and our two big spring blowouts — Beach Weekend and a Luau at the lake with Rusk.

Amidst all of the parties, though, Warner Hall doesn't lose sight of the need for service. Led by service chairmen Elizabeth Brooks and Kristin Hills, we visited Huntersville Nursing Home, sold Davidson huggers for Gethsemane Tutorial Program, sold Buck-a-Tucks to help support Davidson grad Edith Parker's program in Kenya, held a Cancer Olympics with SAE, and sponsored Arsenia, our Phillipine foster child.

Now that we've been properly initiated into Patterson Court, perhaps we can start our own food fights?! (naaaah!)

student involvement

At the beginning of Fall term, no one was certain of the Student Union's future. The organization had lost two of its greatest assets: C. Shaw Smith in the director's chair and pitchers in the 900 Room. Recovery from these devastating blows would be a long, uphill battle.

After 30 years of service, Smith announced his retirement in the Spring of 1983. Fortunately, William Brown, who worked with Smith in the mid-1970's, returned to Davidson to accept the post of Director of the Union. Senior Charlie Lovett, elected president of the Union, reported that the transition was a smooth one. He felt "lucky and honored" to have had the opportunity to work with both men. He was inspired by Smith's wealth of experience and by Brown's innovative spirit.

The 900 Room also miraculously recovered after the loss of pitchers. Because of the new drinking laws in North Carolina, the dining service decided to serve beer only in cups to discourage minors from drinking. After a few weeks of futile protest, students submitted to the regulation. Popularity rebounded. Thursday night discos remained as fashionable as ever.

Lovett, a theatre major, noted major improvements in the Union programs during his interim as president. He was particularly proud of the concert committee's achievements. The Fixx appeared in Love Auditorium in the fall and the Thompson Twins played for the college in March. The Concert Committee, headed by Jim Hoskins, took advantage of an alumnus connection to bring these big name bands to Davidson.

"Big Weekends are on the upswing," Lovett added. Skip Castro performed in the Commons for the Midwinters dance. There was also important growth in the smaller Union programs, such as the Open Luncheon program headed by junior Tony Dick.

Lovett attributed the Union's recent success to the high level of student participation. The Union sanctions 16 committees, including the formidable Women's Concerns Committee, the Pop Films Committee, and the Open Forum Committee. With continued student participation and the leadership of newly elected president Thomas Evans, Lovett is confident that the Student Union will remain the center of campus life.

SGA tackles campus problems

Those students who have never witnessed the spectacle of an SGA meeting have deprived themselves of one of Davidson's most fascinating phenomena. The Union Conference Room is a surrealistic wonder in itself. New Guinean war shields, poison arrows, masks and other primitive relics adorn the west wall. College Bowl trophies decorate the east wall. From the north and south walls formidable portraits of the Gray family frown upon the SGA senators as they straggle in for the weekly assembly.

At nine o'clock, SGA president Hunter Monroe, with vice-president Lentz Ivey at his side, calls the meeting to order from his coveted position at the head of the table. After Ester Kim reads the minutes, the group discusses pressing problems at great length. While three or four of the most enthusiastic actively debate the issues, most of the group seems less distraught by the headed topics such as SGA weekend, student-trustee rapport, and SGA by-laws.

Surprisingly though, things are accomplished at these meetings. The SGA can boast of several marked achievements in the 1983-84 school year. The senate successfully campaigned for the rejection of the unpopular semester system. They also developed a new faculty evaluation system. And the SGA Phonathon raised over $100,000 for the Davidson endowment.

Hunter Monroe listed three specific goals that he and Ivey set for their SGA administration: "to increase the visibility of the SGA activities, and to continue only worthwhile programs and committees." In relation to the third goal, the SGA did cut out many of the less important committees. Ivey reported that they "eliminated non-productive things such as the Corporate Relations Committee and the Commons Committee."

So in spite of their unique manner of operating, it seems that the SGA senators have not lost sight of their by-laws' charge to "bear the responsibility for developing and maintaining Davidson as a superior academic community." —Dick Richards

College Bowl Team wins National Invitational Tournament

Why would any sophomore girl want to leave Davidson on the weekend of Spring Frolics to go to Emory with Tim Waples, David Sisk, Chris Blake, John Eglin, and Dr. Hansford Epes? Well, it is not too difficult to give up Spring Frolics for the National Invitational College Bowl Tournament. And I, together with the gentlemen listed above, had the pleasure and the honor of representing Davidson College at what was a truly a national tournament. Davidson's College Bowl team is probably the least well-known of the college's many teams, but as one of the school's most successful groups, it deserves a large share of recognition.

Most people know the basic rules of the game: players answer questions for points under a strict time limit, and the team with the most points when the time runs out is the winner. But there is more to it than that. People always ask me, "What kind of questions are you asked?" I have to answer that we are asked something from everything. A typical game could ask questions from particle physics, English literature, sports, the movies, and geography in the space of a few minutes. The questions are as diverse as anything imaginable. As far as the members of Davidson's team are concerned, College Bowl is FUN. Why else would we practice for almost two hours everyday, nearly five days a week, every week of the school year?

All of the practice is necessary to prepare for such tournaments as the NIT at Emory. Our team enjoyed its stay at Emory; the questions were good — which is to say that they weren't too hard or too easy. The team's strong points included sports, politics, literature, movies, anything about England, mythology, and extensive knowledge about blue whales!

The drive to and from our tournaments is at least half of our total experience. Atlanta is five hours from Davidson but the time passes quickly when we play "Bottliull," a guessing game to the wonderfully preserved tunes of the 60s. Of course, none of us counted on spending an hour and a half at a rest area outside Atlanta on the way to Georgia Tech for the Southeastern Regionals. The battery on the van wasn't as eager to make it to Atlanta as we were! So we bought a new one, and without further mishap, we made it to Georgia Tech.

Our luck seemed all good from that point on. We stayed in the plush Sheraton-Atlanta, complete with balconies overlooking the scenic downtown areas. The questions went our way, too. Perhaps it was the fact that we brought along Hunter Monroe, who had been a frequent visitor to our daily practices. Or, perhaps it was just that the Davidson College Bowl team is pretty darn good. But we ended up winning the whole tournament. We even beat our old nemesis, Emory, twice. (They were foolish enough to enter two teams in the tournament!) The trip home was a real joy because riding along with us was that big silver bowl. Before leaving Atlanta, we stopped at the Varsity, "the world's largest (and fastest) fast food complex". What more could one ask from an Easter weekend? We had good, clean College Bowl fun. Which is to say that we learned a lot, started some new traditions, and we enhanced Davidson's reputation for academic strength in yet another dimension.

42 seniors win keys to Phi Beta Kappa society

Of all the academic honors which a college may bestow on its students, Phi Beta Kappa has an extra special ring to it. This spring, 42 Davidson seniors were invited to join the Gamma chapter of the national society. In general, students with a 3.6 GPA or better are eligible, but high grades do not guarantee membership. Fifty members of the Davidson faculty and staff who are members of Phi Beta Kappa vote to accept or reject the candidates. According to the constitution of the United Chapters, candidates must demonstrate high scholarship, liberal culture, and good character. Moreover, no more than 12.5 percent of a graduating class may be elected.

In spite of all the prestige of the society, the tangible awards are rather small. They include a membership certificate, a gold key, and a free dinner (complete with Broccoli Hollandaise, Bordeaux wine, and coconut snow balls.). At the initiation dinner Dr. Charles Bitter of the National Humanities Center delivered an address which he titled "It's What You Don't Know" (!). To some, the induction ceremony seemed painfully anticlimactic.

Almost all of the new members, however, were pleased with their acceptance into the society and understandably proud of their keys. "It's a nice recognition of all the hard work," said Lindsey Rader, an English major who plans to attend law school next year. But the question arises: is Phi Beta Kappa worth the hours upon hours of 'hard work' in the library? Few inductees seem to regret all of the study time. Janet Lindsley, a chemistry major, reported that she studied hard but not too hard: "I don't think I've restricted myself." But she admitted that for chem majors "junior year was designed so we had to live in the Chemistry Building."

Carl Rist, another inductee, felt that he studied a great deal his first two years at Davidson. He spent his junior year in Marburg and felt that experience was extremely worthwhile. "Being abroad helped me to get away from the pressures of grades," Rist explained. "And coming back I felt fresh and ready to study again."

Whatever the price they had to pay, the new Phi Beta Kappa inductees have achieved one of the country's most respected academic distinctions. Hats off to all of them.

Dedicated to upholding honor

Each spring, elections for defense advisors, student solicitors, and Honor Council members are held. What do the respected members of this body do?

With hearings occurring at the most inopportune moments, the majority of the work falls on the secretary, chairman, defense advisors, and the student solicitors. Honor Council secretary, Nancy Rosselot, spent untold hours contacting council members, tape recording proceedings in Phi Hall, and transcribing tapes into neat notes after each hearing. Rosselot attended all hearings but did not have the right to vote at the trial's conclusion.

Bobby Silver, 1983-84 chairman, monitored all hearings. The most difficult aspect of his job came after the Honor Council's decision; he informed the defendant of the sanction. For this reason, it is necessary to elect a chairman who is both understanding and decisive, qualities which Silver possesses.

Student solicitors and defense advisors have the responsibility of presenting the case. Solicitors research the accusations and determine whether enough evidence exists to make a charge. Defense advisors represent students charged with honor code violations. Both solicitors and defense advisors interview witnesses, research leads, and present arguments.

Ultimately, the Honor Council makes the decision in a hearing. Of 18 members, six serve at each hearing. Council members come to school in time for Freshman Orientation and may be called during the summer for any possible summer violations. The Council is a group dedicated to the preservation of the Davidson honor system and its accompanying privileges.

The Davidsonian

Friday morning, and with the help of a few students diligently working in the all-night study room, the campus is astir. Everyone, that is, but the dedicated few who are part of the Davidsonian staff. The task of writing articles and photographing various events is a process that goes on throughout the week, but the final editing, layout, and typesetting is done on Thursday night and early Friday morning in order to meet the Friday morning deadline.

Ross Holt and David McGee took over the editorship at the beginning of spring term. Late hours aside, both admit that it is not an easy job. As editor-in-chief, Holt is responsible for everything that goes into the paper, as well as typesetting, layout, and other aspects of production. As executive editor McGee must edit all sections and also oversee production.

Holt foresaw no major changes for the paper. "It has been one of the easiest transitions of editors in a long time," he remarked.

There have been no major changes in policy, although there were slight changes in layout. The paper continued to cover all the news that is important or relevant to the college community. It also serves as a forum for student opinion. "We best serve the students by covering the issues that concern Davidson," said Holt.

Thanks to Business manager Lentz Ivey, who sold ads and subscriptions and put business affairs in order, the financial problems of the past have been solved. A grant from the Activities Tax council also helped by paying off the debt that the Davidsonian incurred when it bought a new typesetting machine.

Holt did want to change one thing about the Davidsonian. By delegating responsibilities more effectively, he expects to reduce those Thursday all-nighters. "Now," he said, "we hope to be finished at least by 3:00 A.M.!"

Quips and Cranks

There's something special about a college yearbook — the way that pictures of past events, stories of events, or a mere mentioning of daily happenings can bring the thoughts rushing back. A picture or saying recalls so many old memories. You sit and savor each page, remembering old friends and reliving the "good old days" of college life.

Whether you're browsing through your yearbook for the first or the fortieth time, we on the Quips and Cranks staff hope you'll stop and wonder about who put together this look into the past. You need only look at the varied aspects of Davidson pictured in the yearbook to know that many different kinds of people wrote the stories, took the pictures, and set up the layouts. And, as a member of the staff I can assure you how much fun we had putting it together.

Working on the yearbook has allowed us a chance to develop a special camaraderie. The fall retreat to Montreat gave us the chance to get to know each other on a "deeper" level. . . . we discovered, for example, how fast Randy Stroud drives uphill and how much luggage one person, who remains nameless, can pack for two days! Many lasting friendships were formed among staff members while exploring the scenic mountains and shopping malls of western North Carolina.

Working together against each coming deadline, Catherine Finegan, Jim Morgan, Randy Stroud, and the rest of the staff fought the mounting sense of chaos filling the office. Trish Lennon and Dick Richards miraculously got all the articles assigned, typed, and organized to send off to the printers. Many a winter weekend was spent up in the office captioning photos and laying out the spreads.

Equally important, we on the Quips and Cranks staff have gotten to know many interesting people at Davidson. The photographers attend a variety of events, capturing people in action — as they study, party, or walk to the P.O. The writers interview a wide section of the student body and faculty about special interests or the routine of college life. The staff has reaffirmed that people at Davidson are talented, special, fascinating, and hilarious (at times).

Working on the yearbook has been a lot of hard work, but it has also been fun and rewarding. Twenty years from now when we look back on these times and think about how all of us have changed, we will treasure the sentimental feelings and the nostalgia that our yearbooks bring us.

Hobart Park

Winter 1981

"SUBMIT," they commanded.

Darryl Cooper and Jerry Lilly, co-editors of the 1984 Hobart Park, issued this imperative to the school when they found themselves with a double budget for the spring issue.

Because of a lack of suitable material, previous editors Suzanne Dickey and Scot Myers decided not to print a Hobart Park for fall 1983. The allotted money, as well as fall submissions, remained in Hobart Park's budget, and Cooper and Lilly decided to make a "large, fantastic" spring issue.

The two advertised throughout March for submission of poetry, essays, plays, art and photography. They were interested especially in the last four genres, since a huge percentage of the fall material was poetry.

Cooper commented, "Artists need an audience. They need to have their talent showcased, like athletes or anyone else, and it is Hobart Park's responsibility to do it."

This responsibility for displaying creative talent is shared by the Davidson Miscellany, a highbrow version of Hobart Park. The Miscellany, edited by John David Ramsey, solicits material from professional writers. Professors Holland and Winkler assist the editor in assembling the publication, which surfaces every spring.

Wildcat Handbook

"First impressions are really important, and the Wildcat Handbook is one of the very first impressions that most freshmen get on campus at College. Through our work on the Handbook, we thought we could make it serve as a really good first impression on the class of 1988," say Paul Coggins and Sarah Speed, the enthusiastic editors of the 1984 Wildcat Handbook, as they explain why they wanted their job. A job like editing the Handbook seems only natural for the team, who both work in the Admissions Office, where they are constantly exposed to the names and faces of incoming freshmen.

The two do not plan any drastic changes in the Handbook, which provides freshmen with pictures of their future classmates as well as information on Davidson life and "special language". This edition will contain more graphics and cartoons; in addition, Paul and Sarah will expand the People-to-know section and the ads section, which will include places in Charlotte frequented by Davidson students. A great source of help to the pair was the questionnaire on the Handbook which they distributed to the 1983-84 freshman class. This helped them to know which types of articles to include again this year and which to drop. Paul and Sarah also received several good ideas on how to improve and change the Handbook from the freshmen.

The editors must finish the Handbook by August 1, 1984. Each weekend, the team meets to discuss their goals for that week. While Paul and Sarah handle writing and graphics, the financial part of publishing the book is handled by Lisa McNeely, their business manager. The Handbook is finished by a combination of money from advertisements and a grant from the college. This forthcoming Handbook will be the most expensive ever and, through Paul and Sarah's hard work and dedication, one of the best Wildcat Handbooks ever.

WDAV caters to classical lovers

Student disc jockey Joe Jaworski checks the broadcasting equipment for his radio program.

Jenny Cooper, Rachel Stewart, and David McGee collect pledges during the WDAV Radiothon.

WDAV, the classical music radio station based on the Davidson College campus, is one of Davidson College's most successful ties with the surrounding communities. Broadcasting at 20,000 watts, WDAV reaches eight counties centered around the Charlotte area. WDAV broadcasts from 6 a.m. until 11 p.m. each day and is the only radio station in this area to play predominantly classical music.

According to Meg Kimmel, Community Relations Director, "WDAV has filled a real void in this community. Before we began broadcasting, listeners had nowhere to turn for classical music." WDAV has filled this void and acquired quite an audience as a result. WDAV's listeners total approximately 36,000 a week.

Davidson College grants WDAV about a quarter of its annual budget. The staff raises the remaining portion of funds needed to run the station.

Kimmel said this year's Radiathon was a huge success, with 1874 listeners pledging $107,000. Kimmel added that "remaining costs are covered by the support of the station's underwriters, now numbering 79." Individuals as well as corporations and businesses contribute to WDAV by underwriting specific hours of programming each week.

WDAV plays more than just classical music, however. Monday through Thursday from 11 p.m. to 1 a.m., WDAV airs a program called "Flip-sides" which features popular music ranging from new-wave to reggae. Senior Joe Jaworski, junior Jenny Cooper, and sophomore Rachel Stewart are the DJ's for WDAV's alternative music program.

Although WDAV's programming has changed little in the past few years, this year the station has been seeking a change of location. WDAV needs room for expansion and the college administration has been investigating possible spots for relocation this year.

A proposed site was the old Shelton House, which was ruled out because of zoning restrictions. Another possibility was expansion into the old student store. However, as Kimmel points out, "A basement of a busy building is not the most effective location for a radio station. Just one pair of high heels, and . . ."

Despite the cramped quarters, the WDAV staff runs a professional station that is well appreciated by its listeners. Kimmel proudly pointed out that WDAV's listeners are enthusiastic and quite complimentary. "At Springfest (a festival celebrating spring and the arts in Charlotte) we had many listeners comment on their enjoyment of our broadcasts."

WDAV is one way that Davidson College reaches people who would otherwise never have contact with the College. Well-received and well-broadcast, WDAV continues to serve not only Davidson College but a good portion of North Carolina.

Entertaining the campus, the Wind Ensemble performs its spring concert to an admiring crowd.

Introducing the next selection, Dr. Lawing directs an outdoor spring concert on the Union Cafe patio.

Striving toward perfection

The Davidson College Chorus began its season with freshman auditions in early September. Following the selections, the new and the old members came together for hours of practice in order to blend and perfect their music. Under the guidance of Dr. W. Vladimir Morosan, "Vlad" to the choir members, this group of 50 voices began work in September and put on an outstanding array of performances throughout the year.

One of the first concerts given was the fall's Sacred Music Convocation. This year, the choir had the privilege of performing "Pax in terra," a rather unusual, modernistic piece by composer William Albright, who was present for the performance. "Pax in terra" became a staple in the choir's ever-growing repertoire, and although it was a difficult piece to learn, everyone felt a general attachment to it by the end of the year.

Fall Convocation, a fund-raising concert for the Charlotte Grocer's Association, Christmas Vespers, and several other Christmas concerts in the area wrapped up the pre-Christmas work. After Christmas the choir faced a strict regimen of three rehearsals per week with mandatory attendance in preparation for the spring break tour through Georgia and Florida.

As spring break and finals drew closer, the music gradually began to take shape. After a marathon rehearsal the night before, the day everyone had long anticipated finally arrived. On Friday morning, March 2nd, the choir boarded the bus for the tour armed with an impressive program, including works in Russian, German, French, Latin, and English by composers such as Schutz, Byrd, Paul Chesnokov, and Debussy. The choir's premier that night in Marietta, Georgia, was a success, as were those that followed. The week after the tour the entire program, including soap bubbles in the finale, was performed for a loyal following in Love Auditorium.

A good musician's work is never done, however; no sooner had the choir put down the tour music than it was time to start preparations for the spring production, "Broadway Comes to Davidson." With a much more relaxed atmosphere at hand, there were selections from Carousel, Show Boat, Oklahoma!, My Fair Lady, The Sound of Music, Porgy and Bess, and more. The spring show debuted May 14th for the student body, and a receptive group of parents, friends, and other pre-graduation well-wishers watched it on the 26th.

The spring season concluded with the traditional performances at Baccalaureate and Commencement. Overall, the choir had a highly enjoyable and successful year.

Catholic students – an active minority

The Catholic Campus Ministry, headed by Greg Murphy and Denise Gyauch, becomes more active each year. Under Father Novotney's guidance they have transformed a minority, only one hundred and one Catholics on campus, into a thriving religious group. Mass is celebrated every Sunday evening at 6:30 in Ingle Chapel, replete with a talented folk group, a dedicated congregation, lay readers, and lay distributors of communion. The Catholic community at Davidson, though, means much more.

Some of the many outside activities attended by students, faculty, and community members are the pre-exam study breaks held in the study room in DCPC. There, the Catholic group gathers to enjoy delicious confections prepared by Mr. and Mrs. Dockery, Mrs. Hernandez, and Mrs. Penny Wright. These parties foster unity and release exam tension.

One of the most successful events of the 1983-84 year was the one-day retreat held at Irwin Lodge on February 4. The subject of the retreat was the problem of being Roman Catholic at a Protestant-Presbyterian college. All shared these experiences and explored ways of handling questions about Catholic doctrine. Father Novotney mediated and all profited from the discussion. Despite the serious orientation of the gatherings, the participants thoroughly enjoyed the day.

Although a Catholic group implies only participation in celebration of the Mass, CCM at Davidson is much more. They are a special group, sharing a different Christian tradition, but genuinely interested in benefiting Davidson.

DCF pronounced "dead"

Davidson Christian Fellowship ended a long period of service in the Davidson College community by disbanding at the end of the 1983-84 school year. While members of the organization recognized that DCF had accomplished some worthwhile goals and while some Small Groups were successful, the members decided in April that DCF had failed to live up to its own standards for Christian fellowship. DCF's usefulness had come to an end.

Leaders felt that DCF had become too centered on itself and had not been reaching out to include others. The organization had lost the excitement of serving Jesus Christ. The Fellowship did not want people to confuse Jesus Christ with Davidson Christian Fellowship.

Davidson College will no longer hear from Davidson Christian Fellowship, but this development does not mean that Jesus Christ will not be proclaimed at Davidson College. Davidson still has the Fellowship of Christian Athletes, the Chapel Committee, Catholic Campus Ministries and numerous independent small groups. Also, a new fellowship will be organized beginning in the fall of 1984.

Davidson Outing Club sponsors weekend trips

The Davidson Outing Club provides weekend trips by students and organizes group outings as well. Students can rent out D.O.C. equipment for their own use or join other students on an Outing Club sponsored program. This year the D.O.C. took students backpacking in the Pisgah National Forest, the Smokies, and the Outer Banks. Many students went rafting on the Nantahala River in the fall and on the Chattooga River in the spring. Closer to Davidson, rock climbing at Stone Mountain and bicycling were popular activities.

The Outing Club's facilities and activities are open to all students, faculty, and staff. There are no membership fees — the name is all that remains of the organization that is now represented by a Union committee. D.O.C. has often merged with the "Davidson Outdoors" program run by the Housing Office. This cooperative effort should bring even more varied opportunities for outdoor recreation in the future.

Dance Troupe formed for “footloose” students

The Davidson Dance Troupe was formed this year to give students the opportunity to choreograph and perform. Though Davidson has offered classes for P.E. credits, there has never been an extracurricular dance group.

The troupe, which consists of 16 dancers — eight men and eight women, ranges from beginners to very experienced dancers. All styles of dance are choreographed to a wide range of music, from classical to rock and roll.

The troupe's founder, sophomore Paulette Kurani, was pleased with the response this year: “I was really surprised to see that so many students share my interest in dance. Because some of the dancers have had years of training and some have had no formal dance training, we are working at different levels to make the most of each person's potential.

The Davidson Dance Troupe performed Spring Frolics weekend as part of the Union activities and for the talent show. Meetings are held every Friday afternoon, and all dance lovers are encouraged to participate.

Students pursue academic interests in subject clubs

Too often, college students confine their academic interests to the assigned reading and the fifty minutes inside the classroom, but a few Davidson students, through subject clubs, extend their view of learning beyond that which is required by the college catalogue.

"We have no official by-laws," explained Jorgia Rice, president of the Psychology Club. She said the purpose of the club is to sponsor activities of special interest to psychology majors even though the entire campus is usually invited. The club has been very successful in arranging group transportation to other universities which hold large symposiums. For example, a group travelled to Duke to attend a symposium led by Dr. Sternberg, a leading specialist in brain physiology. The club also invites guest speakers to Davidson. One of the most dynamic was Sandi Miller from Texas Corporation. Her talk was on industrial organization. Davis explained that the group was coming back to life after several years of dormancy. With the leadership of next year's co-presidents, Meg Barron and Kristin Hills, the club intends to offer a greater variety of activities.

Compared with the Psych Club, the Biology Club is much more career oriented. President Malcom Campbell called the Club a "support group" for Biology majors as they try to find a career in the academic or industrial world. Bio. majors have been extremely successful in finding summer internships. Members of the club have landed fascinating summer research jobs with such institutions as the National Institute of Health, Washington University in St. Louis, Sapelo Island, and Johns Hopkins University. Though biology majors most often go to medical school after Davidson, others plan to continue their study in graduate school, some pursue a career in industrial research, and a few choose unrelated professions. "Our purpose," Campbell stated, "is to expose Biology majors to as many career options as possible."

But Campbell added that the Club is not interested only in the great job hunt. The group tries to bring a guest speaker to Davidson at least once every other week. The entire campus is usually invited to these speeches. Two of the most respected speakers have been Dr. Ostrowski from UNCC and Dr. Abel from the University of Tennessee.

Language clubs speak in tongues

How does the Davidson student that is interested in another language exercise his/her speaking abilities outside of class? The answer is easy — language clubs offer language students, former JYA'ers, internationals, and other interested persons the opportunity to gather in small groups and speak French, Spanish, or German.

All three clubs got off to a strong start at the beginning of the year, but as the academic pressures increased, the attendance at the weekly meetings lagged. There were always a few eager bi-linguals in the 900

Room on Monday nights to "shoot the breeze" in French or Spanish, but the German Stammtisch seemed to attract the most attention.

At first, each club snacked on their respective country's fare to set the atmosphere, but as the year went on, everyone resorted to beer in the 900 Room. Regardless of food or drink, however, Davidson's language clubs provide all involved a unique and culturally enriching experience.

- Literary Societies stimulate intellectual debate

Davidson is a school of many long and proud traditions. The honor code, for example, has defined Davidson's noble aims since the day the college was founded. Perhaps the only other tradition that has existed for so long on our verdant campus is that of the literary society. In their 147th year, the Eumenean and Philanthropic Literary Societies have experienced something of a resurgence on campus. Although the societies are, in many ways, quite different, each has begun to pursue a more active role in the life of the College.

The Eu Society, led by its president Mandy Barber, stresses the informality of its group. Eu meets each week to discuss topics of interest to the Society, to the college, and to the nation. With the likes of Anderson Scott and John Driggers, these discussions could hardly fail to be interesting. Eu has also maintained a long-standing tradition of excellent charades. In fact, Woodrow Wilson is said to have engaged in a match of charades with the Eu Society.

In a way, this year has begun a renaissance in the Phi Society. In November, the society sponsored a rare books symposium, "The World of Rare Books," which featured Leona Rostenberg, a well-known New York book dealer, and Glen Ruzicka from the Library of Congress. Phi also brought Davidson's new president, Dr. Kuykendall, to the campus in April to address the student body on the role of students in the College's future.

In a break with tradition, Phi voted this year to admit women into the society — a policy that has existed at Eu for some time. Meg Surratt and Carolyn Meier have the honor of being the first women ever inducted into Phi. Each of these women has been elected to offices in the society for the following year.

The Phi Society, which is more formal than the Eu Society, was guided this year by its president Rick Graves with help from vice-president Jeb Benedict and first supervisor Hunter Monroe. Phi meets every week to debate, to discuss, and, as its constitution says, to "unite . . . in closer bonds of friendship."

The "Y" enjoys a successful year

During the school year, most Davidson students caught up in academics to the point of forgetting all else. The YStudent Service Corps, however, reminds us that there is more to life than academics; the "Y" strives to keep Davidson students participating in community activities.

The "Y" has traditionally been a service organization, stressing community-student interactions. It encompasses several aspects of community service, including the CROP program, Gesthemane tutoring, the Senior Citizens program, the Day Care Center program, visits to the Huntersville prison, and work with the Davidson Community Center and the North Mecklenburg YMCA.

President Beth Maczka has catalyzed several changes important for the "Y". Two new programs have been added this year. The first is a tutoring program in Huntersville at Girls' Haven, a home for teenage girls. Davidson students tutor girls there three nights a week. The second new program is the Nuclear Awareness Committee, which was created as a forum for discussion of both sides of the nuclear arms debate. The committee has sponsored guest speakers and panel discussions on the arms race.

Along with the two new programs, Maczka has initiated distribution of a bi-weekly "Y" newsletter over the campus. "We want to let students know their help is needed," Maczka said, "The newsletter provides week-to-week exposure to the service projects that need volunteers." Vice president Chris Blake has stressed the need to keep in continual contact with the service coordinators for the Patterson Court houses. The "Y" makes an effort to cooperate with other service organizations in order to involve students in the community most productively.

The year has been successful for the "Y" not only in increased student participation (about 350 students have participated in "Y" service activities this year) but also in fund raising. The CROP Disco raised $1000, and the CROP Walk raised $5000 for world hunger. The Christmas Gift Fund raised $4000 for the Gesthemane tutoring program, which seeks to raise test levels of Davidson elementary students to normal levels.

Increased student interest has also brought more rewards. "We're planning to get some office space in the Union, and the Activities Tax Council awarded us $1000," Maczka added.

Plans for the "Y" next year include increased emphasis on leadership development for the "Y"'s program coordinators, increased participation from students, and more effective fund drives.

DERS handles emergencies

What do you do if you and a friend are in the gym and he suddenly has a heart attack? Or your roommate burned himself on the popcorn popper? If you cut your hand, what do you do if you see some broken glass?

The first thing that you should do is remain calm and call 892-3031, the Davidson Emergency Rescue Service (DERS). Help is only minutes away in the form of Davidson students trained as Emergency Medical Technicians (EMTs). The EMTs are alerted by their on-call beepers and arrive at the scene with the knowledge and the equipment to handle emergencies until the proper authorities arrive. The DERS consists of 11 two-person squads who are on call for a two-to-four day period every fourth week. One of the two squad members must be a licensed EMT.

Central Piedmont Community College offers an EMT training course that is taught on Davidson's campus. Students attend bi-weekly, three-hour meetings. The class stresses the principles discussed in the EMT manual and teaches emergency techniques with the use of mannequins. The students also observe for 10 hours in the emergency room of Charlotte Memorial Hospital. Finally, students are evaluated by the course instructor through both a written and a practical test. Competent students are urged to take the EMT state licensing examination.

When certified, EMTs can become further involved with DERS, work on an ambulance, work with the North Mecklenburg Rescue Squad, or serve in some other health occupation relating to their skills. According to EMT Jim Morgan, "I've been able to help others with the skills that I've learned as an EMT. I get a lot of satisfaction from doing it."

APO serves Davidson and community

Alpha Phi Omega (APO), a national service fraternity, allows Davidson students to participate in community and even national service projects. APO, founded on the principles of the Boy Scouts of America, is open to men and women who are interested in helping others.

APO begins each school year with a used book sale in the Union's game room. This sale takes place each term to help students sell their old books and buy cheaper used books. APO members also serve as ushers for Spring Convocation and distribute course registration forms each term.

Nationally, APO works with the Easter Seals Telethon in Charlotte. It also sponsors the Ugliest Man on Campus contest and donates the proceeds to the North Carolina Chapter of Cystic Fibrosis Foundation.

Those interested in joining APO contact the vice-president in charge of membership, Deepak Sawhney. They then become pledges and complete a pledge service project before their spring induction. At this time the executive committee is elected. This spring, Beth Gerken turned over the office of the president to Elena Paul; Mike Snell replaced Sawhney as vice-president in charge of membership; Kerry Holbrook became vice-president in charge of service; the office of the treasurer was filled by Daryl Pfister; and acting as secretary will be Paul Coggins.

Political clubs bolster awareness of current events

Even though the Davidson students, political science majors, read about in the news, they are not always learning to study theoretically in a political science course. A small group of interested students, however, assumes a more participatory role in the political world. The two political societies at Davidson, the College Democrats and the College Republicans, dedicate their time and energy to the service of their respective parties.

"Our purpose," explains Harriette Gaston, President of the College Democrats, "is to inform students and the community of their political interests and candidates they should be aware of." Roughly 25 students are active members of the College Democrats, including David Gaston, who served as vice-president, and Pat Sellers, the secretary/treasurer. The CDs organized a voting registration drive in October as well as a forum on drinking laws in November.

Like the Democrats, the College Republicans keep students informed as well as maintaining contacts with regional campaign managers. The society assists with national, state, and local elections. Tony Holt, President of CRs said that their purpose is not merely to sell the Republican Party. Instead, they wish to promote awareness on important issues so that voters may form their decisions intelligently. Too much emphasis on a political party can be detrimental. Holt explained that the society wanted to "avoid being blind voters." As President, Holt was assisted by vice-president Monica McGee and Secretary Arienne Cheek.

Of course, political societies are always most active during election years. Both the CDs and the CRs are gearing up for an active role in next year's presidential election. The Republicans are already planning to conduct a mock election early in the fall term.

ATHLETICS

"The only competition worthy a wise man is with himself."

Mrs. Anna Jackson, Memoirs and Essays

The thrills of IMACtion

With the advent of fall it was once again time to kick off another year of IMAC. Time for the pseudo-athletes to dust off their sneakers and commit their bodies to the rigors of physical exertion. For the first time in many years the activities were under the auspices of the elected Intramural Athletic Council, but there was little doubt that ex-czar Steve Soud still ran the show.

Even before classes were in full-swing flickerball teams were being formed. Flickerball is that immortal contortion of football (rugby?) that bemuddles freshmen and gives meaning to KA-SAE rivalry. The '83 season disappointed no one.

One of the big surprises was Moral Hex, the freshman hall that appeared to quickly comprehend the subtleties of the game. With an excellent team effort, they were the dominant freshman team. In the women's league, the Penthouse Babes avenged themselves by defeating the last three years' champs, the Amazons, in the finals. The KA-SAE rivalry, however, was once again the spotlight. In the end, Rissie and Lilly Mae (SAE) emerged victorious over the beaten Gold.

Before the dust had even settled on the flickerball fields, IMAC moved indoors for another wild basketball season. As expected, senior Bill Satterwhite led the Supreme Court to the 'A' League championship. In the women's division, freshmen First and Foremost rolled through the season and whipped BSC in the finals.

The IMAC Cinderella team of the year was in the B League. Starrcade '83, a rag-tag menagerie of hapless independents who were scrounged together by Soud, emerged from the woodwork. Who would have expected a team composed of The Iron Sheik, Dr. Jay, Andre the Giant, Snyder the Glide, Sgt. Slaughter, Superfly, and The American Dream to ever make it to the finals by beating top-ranked Mooresville Walkers (SAE) and The Headhunters? Yet all dreams must come to an end; the 'Cade bowed out to Pavlov's Dogs in the finals.

Before the spring line-up rolled in, the Contraceptive Sponges outlasted the Wally Worlders 3-2 to win the street hockey title. Typical spring rains played havoc with the softball schedule but did not prevent Jerry's Kids from staging a Midnight Madness of their own. In volleyball, the Old Men were once again the dominant force in the men's league. The co-ed division turned out to be little more than friendly pick-up games.

During the off-season many questions arise. Can KA Gold win without Satterwhite? Will there be a Starrcade '84? Can IMAC live on without the Czar? Tune in next year for another fun-filled IMAC season.

—lan Dunn

The Sigma Alpha Epsilon flickerball team prepares to annihilate the opposition.

IMAC does not live by flickerball alone. So with a tremendous serve, the volleyball season is underway.

Club Sports

Needless to say, many students love athletic competition but lack the time or ability to participate on the varsity teams. On the other hand, the intramural programs can be too light and laid back. Club sports have arisen as a popular alternative to varsity and intramural athletics.

Club sports are teams organized entirely by students with the guidance of the Sports Club Council. Each team selected its own managers, plans its budget, and makes out its own schedule. There were seven major club sports this year: football, soccer, water skiing, lacrosse, rugby, tennis and volleyball.

John McColl served as the captain of the club football team, featuring such ex-varsity members as Diamond Jim Cox and Dwayne Lett, Esq. McColl reported that the team's schedule included games with U.N.C., N.C. State, Clemson and Appalachian State. Though the team has not met much success in such David-and-Goliath-type situations, the members enjoy visiting the big universities and playing in their stadiums.

Rugby has emerged as one of the most popular club sports, having over 30 participants. Junior Jim Brueggemann captained the team. Doug, the Animal, Ammar explained the sport's attractions: "If you want physical contact, it's there." He likes rugby because it demands a great deal of "speed and agility," as well as "a lot of learned skill."

Though rugby is known as one of the roughest team sports, the team has suffered very few injuries apart from one sprained ankle and one dislocated shoulder. In addition, all hostilities end when the clock stops. According to Ammar, "Half of the sport is the game, and half is the party afterwards." The home team traditionally supplies a keg following the game.

Jim Morgan, a senior, led the water skiing team which participates in four or five tournaments per year. Davidson competes in the South Atlantic Conference with such universities as Clemson, Auburn and Georgia Tech.

The high level of participation in all the club sports demonstrates their value as a recreational outlet and a temporary relief from the academic pressures.

UP AND OVER. Sophomore Julie Waters and her mount take the jump.

Better luck next year

Like warriors off to battle. The '83 Davidson wildcats prepare to face another foe on the gridiron battlefield.

Playing in the Southern Conference for the first time since 1973, the 'Cats struggled to a dismal 2-8 record, 0-5 against a makeshift SC schedule. Though shut out only once, the 'Cats were outscored 323-120 with three opponents scoring 50 or more points. Head Coach Ed Farrell and several players pointed to frequent mistakes like fumbles, bad snaps, and blocked kicks as the reasons for their demise. Overall, there seemed to be a lack of team effort; the defense allowed the big plays while the offense seemed incapable of sustaining a drive, let alone scoring.

This lack of coherent effort, however, was eclipsed by several individuals turning in an outstanding season. Team captains Will Bynum, Bob Miller, Mike Harbert, and Keith Martin led the way with their leadership. The receiving tandem of Todd Hermetz and Jeff McSwain was exceptional.

"Those two have consistently made big catches all year," said Farrell.

The pleasant surprise of the year was freshman running back Mike Cate, who gained over 1,000 all-purpose yards. Reserve quarterback Jeff Haney also made his presence felt late in the season with his rifle-arm. Defensively, the Bynum brothers, Will and Carl, played hard-nose football while Stockton Whitten shored up the secondary.

With sixteen departing seniors, the 'Cats will face a stiff challenge in '84, but with the coaching of Farrell there is always hope that they will persevere and turn in a winning season.

—Ian Dunn

Captain on the quarterdeck. Gary Stewart rivets his attention on the opposing quarterback while Dwayne D. Wright shores up the secondary.

Gordon Slade was a familiar face around the Davidson College campus in the late 1960's and early '70's. He came to the college from the Mid-West and made a name for himself as an outstanding quarterback. A native of Evansville, Indiana, Slade attended Davidson on a football scholarship. Slade recalls, "I didn't get that many scholarship offers out of high school. When Davidson came offering one, it was an ideal situation."

Homer Smith, head football coach, selected Slade. At this time, Davidson was placing more emphasis on its football team. In order to recruit more players, the team began to offer more football scholarships. Slade won such a scholarship, the granting of which would change Davidson football history.

Slade had a remarkable first three years and was an All-Southern Conference player his junior and senior years. In his senior year he exploded as the quarterback for the Davidson team. At the time, Slade was the only quarterback to lead Davidson to a football championship. He did this in 1969 when he led Davidson to the Tangerine Bowl. This bowl appearance was clinched when Davidson, who was losing to East Carolina 27-0 at halftime, roared back for a 42-27 win, the greatest comeback in NCAA history. Davidson went on to the bowl in Orlando but lost to Toledo, 53-33. This loss knocked Davidson out of its football madness, and a football de-emphasis was begun.

Slade was also a great baseball player at Davidson. He held an incredible batting average, including a .428 his sophomore year. Slade loved baseball, but he said, "I don't think I'm a prime prospect as an outfielder. I'm not good enough for some team to give me enough money to make me play baseball."

In 1969, Slade was drafted in the seventh round by the Baltimore Colts. He made the team, but was assigned to the taxi squad. Led by quarterback John Unitas, the Colts went on to win the Superbowl that year.

Slade was let go in the middle of the season, and he finished out the year with the Richmond Saints in the Atlantic Coast Football League. The Richmond squad was a feeding team for the New Orleans Saints. The head coach for the Saints asked Slade to return to camp in the summer of 1971. Slade refused, fearing he wasn't physically fit to start as an NFL quarterback. He was also called by the Washington Senators baseball team, but he turned them down.

Slade was a psychology major. After graduation he went to work in the real estate business with his father in his hometown of Evansville. Slade worked for a year before landing a position with Cameron-Brown, an Atlanta real estate company; Presently, he finances commercial real estate projects. He has worked for Cameron-Brown for the past 11 years.

Slade lives in Stone Mountain, Georgia. He is married and has two children, a son, 9, and a daughter, 4. His hobbies include tennis and golf, and he is currently an elder at Lithonia Presbyterian Church. He has been very active in his college class, and he has been class chairman for the Living Endowment for the past two years. Slade is still dedicated to his school and should always be remembered as one of Davidson's greatest athletes and graduates.

The 1983 Women's Field Hockey season began auspiciously with the appointment of Pat Daley as head coach. Ms. Daley brings an impressive list of credentials to her post at Davidson.

Since her 1978 graduation from the University of Maryland, where she co-captained the field hockey, J.V. lacrosse and basketball teams, she has pursued her career at Indiana University and Hollins College. Her numerous coaching accomplishments include the USA Olympic Development Camp Program and teams representing the southeast in the 1981 and 1983 National Hockey Tournament.

The Lady Wildcats made an excellent adjustment under Ms. Daley's gifted tutelage, and she describes her team as a, "Hard, hard working group whose intensity grew throughout the season." Undaunted by grueling summer heat, the players practiced a vigorously difficult running program and concentrated on improving their specific skills. Coach Daley cites significant progress in all areas as the spark for an increasing confidence throughout the season.

Davidson Field Hockey achieved another 6-4-1 winning record, highlighted by victories at Division II Pfeiffer (2-0) and Division I Appalachian State University (2-1). Relishing difficult assignments, the team scrimmaged Division I powers, Duke University and James Madison University. A cold, sheeting rain plagued the team trek to Sweetbriar, but the valorous Lady Wildcats prevailed 2-1. An outstanding performance at Catawba (4-1) completed this year's contests on a triumphant note.

Many of our valued players will be returning for the 1984 Field Hockey Program. Demonstrating the dedication that characterized this year, Coach Pat Daley and the Lady Wildcats are planning aggressive spring and summer practice. Ms. Daley declares that she is "looking forward to an even more successful season." Able participants and confident fans enthusiastically echo this prediction.

Slagle and Slagle: A winning combination

Alright!! Tony Cabrales celebrates one of his many goals as Brian Shockley and Michael Lufkin provide joyful accompaniment.

Charlie Slagle continued to mold Davidson soccer into a tradition of excellence in 1983. In many respects 1983 was the program's most successful season ever.

Prior to the season the team established four objectives, three of which they achieved. The team finished with a winning record, won first place at the Hampden-Sydney Tournament, and defended its crown in the Charlotte Area Tournament over Belmont Abbey, UNCC, and Winthrop. The lone setback came in the Southern Conference title match-up, a 3-1 loss to Furman.

The team, which finished 12-5-3 and 10th in the South, raced to a 10-1-1 start. The single loss, a well-fought 3-0 game, was at the hands of Duke, then ranked #1 nationally. The team clinched the North Division championship with a Parents' Weekend 0-0 tie against Appalachian State before the program's largest-ever crowd. Several other games broke the 1,000 attendance mark as well. On the eve of the SC championship match, Slagle was voted Co-Coach of the Year for the SC, an honor he won outright in 1981. Although the Wildcats outplayed the Paladins in the title match, a few defensive lapses haunted them. Intense offensive pressure throughout the second half kept Furman backed up to its own goal, but the Paladins dodged the bullet successfully.

Accolades that began with Slagle's award filled the post-season. Senior Pat Woodward and sophomores Tony Cabrales and Wallis Goodman garnered All-Division spots, while senior Peter Burr (team MVP) and junior Jim Wright were Honorable Mention. Woodward, the goalie, was named to the All-south third team. Cabrales and classmate Sean Austin were the leading scorers, leaving bright prospects for the future.

Over hill, over dale . . .

"Have shoes will travel" could be the title of the 1987 cross country season for Davidson's men's and women's teams. Neither team had a single home meet during the season, so text books, cheap hotels and Pizza Huts were the order of the day. All the travelling paid off, however, as both teams made it to the NAIA National Championship in Kenosha, Wisconsin.

The season started at Duke University as the women slipped by Duke 28-27 with Sarah Patterson leading the Cats with a 5K time of 20:13 finishing third overall. Seniors Tamara Foreman and Adelyn Lutz placed fourth and fifth, respectively, as Jean Webb and Ginger Sullivan rounded out Davidson's top five, finishing seventh and eighth in the race. The men lost to Duke 21-40 but showed hints of what was to come later in the season. Frank Ivey won the race with a time of 28:12 over the 5.25 mile course. He was followed by the first alignment of the top five the season offered with Greg Foreman sixth, Jim Rogers 12th, Bob Watkins 13th, and Brian Zielinski 15th.

The women travelled to Georgia State next, where they came in third in a six-team meet. Sarah Patterson and Tamara Foreman led the 'Cats again (eighth and tenth respectively), but Jean Webb switched places on the team with Adelyn Lutz in the top five for Davidson.

The men went to Salem, Virginia where they finished second in a five team meet, losing only to Emory. They defeated Roanoke, Wake Forest, and Lynchburg. Frank Ivey finished second in the meet, leading a new top five composed of himself, Trey Jammes 13th, Jim Rogers 14th, Bob Watkins 18th, and Greg Foreman 19th.

Both teams then went to rain-soaked Appalachian State for their invitational meet. The meet turned out to be extremely memorable for the men's team: an unexpected pit stop sidetracked one of the top seven during the race, who was seen crouched in the underbrush, muttering obscenities. The men tied for fourth in the five-team meet and the women, who ran an uneventful race, finished second to ASU.

The teams moved on to the NAIA district championship in Pembroke, NC. The women won their event and qualified for the Nationals. Sarah Patterson won the race with a clocking of 18:28 over the 5K course. She was followed closely by Tamara Foreman. The men finished second to St. Augustine and went to Kenosha with the women. Frank Ivey finished third, making the All-District team, followed by Trey Jammes, Frank Hague, Jim Rogers and Greg Foreman.

Five days later found the cross country teams in Raleigh for the North Carolina State Cross Country Championships. The weather was perfect until five minutes before the women's race when it poured, turning the course into a giant mudslide. The runners had a rough time slogging through the mud, and the times reflected it. The women finished fifth out of nine and the men trudged to eighth out of sixteen.

After a long rest the teams went to Charlotte for the UNCC invitational at McAlpine Greenway. The women won their three team events, with Sarah Patterson winning the 5K race. Tamara Foreman finished second overall, with Jean Webb, Adelyn Lutz, and Judy Dalton rounding out Davidson's top five. The men ran some of their fastest times here finishing fourth out of 10 teams. Frank Ivey finished sixth in the race, followed by Trey Jammes, Greg Foreman, Bryan Zielinski and Frank Hague in the top five.

The men travelled alone to the Southern Conference championships at Appalachian State. The weather refused to co-operate, providing strong winds and a wind chill factor of 0°F at the race time. Davidson finished eighth in the nine team event.

The event that everyone had been waiting for arrived at last: THE NATIONALS!! After a struggle with scheduling exams, raising money, and training, the teams arrived in Kenosha. The weather again frowned on the runners, with the pouring rain turning the firm, black Wisconsin dirt into soft, sticky black mud. The mud played havoc with the race as the women finished 24th and the men finished 32nd. Tamara Foreman and Frank Ivey led the teams, respectively.

Overall, the season was a successful one for Davidson, with both teams making the Nationals. 1984 should be a good year for the men since only Frank Ivey and Bryan Zielinski graduate out of the top seven; the women, too, should be strong in 1984.

Team plays below par

Putt-putt wiz Duncan McCall displays fine putting form but a poor golf wardrobe.

Plagued by an excess of rain this spring, the Davidson College golf team had a season of intermittent play. Matches had to be postponed in nearly every tournament this year, often in the middle of a round.

Comprised of eight members, the team has at least one representative from each class at Davidson. This year's members were captain Gary Schenk, Tom Davis, Tyler Long, Todd Weibusch, Bob Carr, Dave Lincoln, Bryan Sloan, and Bobby Dounie.

The Davidson team practices at the Charlotte Country Club and Mallard Head Country Club. They started their season in the fall with a win in the Davidson Invitational at the Charlotte Country Club, defeating such schools as Western Carolina University and The Citadel. Davidson participated in two other tournaments in the fall: The James Madison Invitational and The Elon Tournament. Unfortunately, these two tournaments were disappointing losses for the team.

In the spring, Davidson defeated Western Carolina at Raintree Country Club and then travelled to Maggie Valley, where they defeated Presbyterian College. On the heels of these wins, however, came a loss in an Aiken, S.C. tournament and a loss to The Citadel in Charleston, S.C., where heavy fog made play nearly impossible.

The golf team did not finish with a winning season, but most of the players are hopeful about next year and the direction of captain Todd Weibusch. The coach of the Davidson team, Thom Cartmill, was the moving force behind the construction of the three-hole Covington facility. It is an excellent facility and should help improve the team in future years.

Come sail away

The Davidson Sailing Team is a rather unknown varsity sport which is organized and run by its members. This year, Captain Kathleen Huff and SAISA Women's Coordinator, Muffin Alford, led the team with guidance and assistance from French professor Hallam Walker. With Lake Norman as their base for practicing and holding regattas, the team sails 420's, and a 14-foot, two-man boat with a mainsail and a jib.

Davidson belongs to the South Atlantic Intercollegiate Sailing Association (SAISA), which is comprised of 16 teams from North Carolina to Florida, including nationally ranked College of Charleston, Florida State University, and University of North Carolina.

Changes in the region's schedule this year resulted in the spring season starting before Davidson's spring term began, causing a problem with participation. While neither the fall nor the spring seasons proved outstanding, there were strong individual performances by Alford and Mark LePage. With only one graduating letterman, next year should show promise.

Young 'Cats: Inexperienced but talented

Coach Bobby Hussey had quite a challenge before him at the outset of the season: with only one returning starter, Hussey had to integrate mostly inexperienced sophomores and freshmen into the game plan, and, as we all know, there is no substitute for experience. For several games he shuffled around the starting line-up looking for a winning combination. Though this shifting gave all the team members some playing time, it caused an inconsistent attack and led to some early season losses.

Nevertheless, the 'Cats always put on a fantastic show in Johnson Gym and displayed ability and talent that belies their 9-19 finish. They crushed hapless Wofford and Erskine as well as scoring impressive victories over University of the South, Furman, and South Carolina. The Notre Dame game, played before 10,687 spectators, was once again a classic matchup. The young 'Cats fought tenaciously throughout the game but fell short in overtime, losing 56-59.

Many games were close until the final minutes where it seems the 'Cats were tripped up by their inexperience. However, the team matured and grew more consistent through the season, and this trend looks to its fruition in the next season.

The team Captains were seniors Tom Franz and Kenny Wilson. Franz's experience and court leadership were his great assets in crucial games, where he served as the stabilizing force on the court. The spotlight, however, shown on Kenny Wilson, the All-Conference, All-American (Honorable Mention) forward who led the team in scoring (511 pts.), rebounding (6.3 rpg), and became Davidson's fifth all-time leading scorer. Wilson's electrifying speed and resounding dunks paced the 'Cats throughout the season.

The supporting cast was made up of one junior, seven sophomores, and three freshmen. Jim McConkey anchored the team at center and showed occasional sparks of offensive firepower. Pepper Bego (10.7 ppg) teamed with freshman sensation Chris Heineman as guards; their quick ball-handling skills and impressive long-range shooting were the offensive catalyst. Gerry Born turned in a magnificent season after replacing Rafael Hernandez, who left school over Christmas break, and was a consistent scoring threat (8.8 ppg) as well as a powerful rebounder (5.0 rpg).

Couch Hussey used his other players quite liberally early in the season. Frank Johnson, Ken Niebuhr, Ted Wolfe, Billy Naso, Anthony 'Ace' Tanner, and Caryl Dawson, who also left school, contributed to the overall team effort. 'Ace', a freshman, demonstrated awesome natural talent and showed much future promise.

The 'Cats will enter next season with a corps of experienced young players and a great deal of optimism. Coach Hussey has received a contract extension and will be coaching a team comprised entirely of his recruits. Franz and Wilson will be missed, but the potential exists for a dominant team of the future.

Lefty Driesell is now a well known name among basketball fans around the United States. Driesell is the head basketball coach at the University of Maryland which just won the Atlantic Coast Conference title in the 1983-84 season, with a 74-62 victory over Duke. Driesell has a long and impressive record which includes the ten years he spent as head coach at the Davidson College basketball team.

The playing experience of Lefty Driesell came in his college years. Driesell was a starter for the Duke Blue Devils under head coach Hal Bradley. He graduated in 1954. He entered coaching in 1957 when he was named head coach at Newport News High School in Virginia. While there Driesell sold encyclopedias door to door in order to make ends meet.

Lefty Driesell was then appointed head basketball coach at Davidson for the 1960-61 season. The Wildcats got off to a slow start his first year with a 9-14 record, but there was hope because Davidson defeated Wake Forest 65-59 in the season Opener. The following winter Davidson improved to 14-11. The 'Cats followed this record with four straight winning seasons, each with 20 or more victories.

While at Davidson, Driesell was named Southern Conference coach of the year four times, and under his tutelage the Wildcats enjoyed their first three Southern Conference victories in 1966, 1968, and 1969. Davidson was also ranked in the nation's top ten teams for three of his seasons.

Driesell was a remarkable coach at Davidson. There were many laughs among students when he arrived at Johnson Gym and hung a sign on the door that read, "closed practice." The laughs were due to Davidson's record, but there were only tears when he decided to leave.

At Davidson, Driesell belonged to the Davidson College Presbyterian Church, and he also helped form the Davidson chapter of the Fellowship of Christian Athletes. Moreover, he was a high official in the Mecklenburg County Boy Scouts of America.

In 1969 Lefty Driesell accepted the job as head basketball coach at the University of Maryland, the job he presently holds. His record at Maryland does not include the conference wins like his Davidson record does, but it is equally impressive. Driesell has reached the ACC finals six times, with his 1984 victory over Duke being his first title. Four of the previous times in the tournament, the Terrapins have lost in the final round by three points or less. Because of these close losses, Lefty's record has really been underrated. Maryland is definitely going to be a major team in future NCAA tournaments.

In 1980 there was talk of naming Driesell athletic director at Davidson College. Driesell said he would consider the post, but that he had no desire to leave Maryland. The plan never progressed past the talking stage, and no action was taken. In the near future, at least, Driesell plans to remain with the Terrapins.

A season of "private victories"

How do you measure athletic success? Is it solely a question of wins and losses? If the only victories are those found in the record books, then the women's basketball team was not a success. The team did not win one of their 27 scheduled games — they never even came close. But Coach Daley and her nine dedicated players didn't see it that way.

"Winning is setting goals and achieving them," said team member Lou Hamilton in a letter to the Davidsonian. And if that is so, then the members of the women's basketball team are champions in the true sense of the word and worthy of admiration and respect.

Although up against the worst of odds, namely being a non-scholarship team consisting of only nine players, none of whom exceeded 5'9", the team never gave up. They played 27 long and sometimes frustrating games, but they set their own standards and measured performance accordingly.

"Out of 1,400 students at Davidson," wrote Hamilton, "there are nine of us on the basketball team. We have found a particular value in setting goals together, working toward them, and finally achieving them. When the nine of us are on the court looking (up!) at the fifteen out of some 10,000 from UNC-Charlotte, the results on the scoreboard look one-sided. But to us the results go far beyond the numbers on the wall . . . Given our physical size and the size of other Division I, full-scholarship, six-foot-plus players, the absolute score is nowhere near as important as the relative score."

Hamilton's words express the sense of team spirit that made this group so special. There were no stars — each of the nine players started at some point in the season. Their skill level was essentially equal and that eliminated competitiveness between players. They are friends and enjoy playing basketball. Sometimes caught up in the quest for championships, people tend to forget that the main purpose of sports is to have fun. The women's basketball team did not forget.

It is true that a victory here and there would have been welcome, but that victory never came — at least not in terms of wins and losses. Still, this team has every reason to hold its head high. Faced with an impossible schedule, diminutive stature, and academic pressures, these nine girls met the challenge and refused to give up even when spectators jeered and opponents laughed at them. They never lost sight of their own personal goals nor forgot the progress they had made.

Yes, their triumphs were small — reducing turnovers, holding opponents to less than 100 points, increasing the number of shots per game — but they were nonetheless achievements and something to be proud of. They learned from the experience; they grew from it. Coach Daley would not trade them for any other team in the world. They were a hardworking and dedicated bunch.

"We have grown a lot (unfortunately not in inches!) from these experiences," Lou Hamilton said. "And the only way we were able to do this was that we supported each other continuously and unconditionally. And that is winning. It really is."

—Joanne Stryker

Wrestlers pin down a winning season

The human pretzel, Senior Tom Hissam applies a power half-nelson to a helpless opponent.

Under the direction of Coach Vince Arduini, the 1984 Wrestling Team secured its first winning season in many years. Coach Arduini felt that the tremendous dedication of each individual led to this success. The season was highlighted by the Wildcats' third place finish out of a strong field of nine teams at the Washington and Lee Tournament and by their performance at the Homecoming Quad meet.

Referring to the team's performance at Washington and Lee, a team member exclaimed, "We wrestled some good people today and won!" Tom Cardwell and Mike Adams each placed fourth, John Breidenstine, and Mike Keeley placed second, while John T. Lay and Tom Hissam took firsts in their weight classes. Tom Hissam was also named the tournament's most outstanding wrestler. Although Taylor Simpson did not place at this tournament, he wrestled extremely well in a weight which was seen as the most competitive one at the tournament.

In the first Wrestling Homecoming, which was well attended by wrestling alumni who had come in order to honor the late Coach Charlie Parker, the Wildcats defeated arch rival Elon (30-22) and trounced University of the South (48-6), while just barely losing to Catawba (25-26). While Brian Rice missed several matches due to illness, his presence at the Quad meet guaranteed a victory over Elon.

With a strong core of returning wrestlers and the promise of the wrestlers in the incoming freshman class, Coach Arduini hopes for even better years ahead. Seniors John Breidenstine and Tom Hissam will be greatly missed. With 19 wins each, they provided valuable stability and leadership for the team.

John summed up his four years of wrestling by saying, "While at times I could have thought of 1,000 places I would have rather been than in the practice room, wrestling taught me a lot and was an experience that I wouldn't trade for anything."

Baseball team achieves goals

1984 was a baseball season highlighted by improvement and bad weather.

"We missed 13 games due to rain," said Coach George Greer. "We feel we could have won many of those games and accomplished one of our main goals this season, to go over .500."

Despite failing to win half their games, by going 12-16, the team did have the best record of any Davidson baseball team since 1975. The team succeeded in accomplishing another goal, winning more than three games against Division I schools. Davidson won seven such games this year.

"The rainouts really hurt us because not only did we not get to play some more games we could have won, but not playing during the week hurt our timing," said sophomore shortstop Keith Helfant. Helfant had a fine year this year, leading the team in batting with a .352 percentage. That is a dramatic improvement over his performance last year of .214. Look for Helfant to have another fine spring next season.

In addition to Helfant, sophomores Tim Waters and Scott Weaver showed tremendous progress over last year. Both raised their batting average and committed fewer errors. Waters was also listed in USA Today as tenth in the nation in the category of doubles per game. Waters led the team with 11 doubles.

Pitching is an area where the Cats need to improve. Freshmen Billy Waitsman and Steve Condon were inconsistent, though each displayed moments of great promise. Weaver led the team in innings pitched, victories, and complete games. Success or continued mediocrity will hinge on the pitchings staff's ability to improve even further.

The fine seasons by this year's crop of freshmen are a source of great optimism. Freshman third baseman Dave Turgeon led the team in home runs and runs batted in. Freshmen Dan Simonds and Dave DePaul were regular starters at catcher and center field respectively and played very well, especially defensively.

"I think we all learned a lot this season," said DePaul. "We'll only lose three players to graduation and we are getting some good recruits, so next season looks promising. Only wish we could play now."

The team does lose three fine players in seniors Scott Redding, Mick Smith, and Jeff McSwain. All three made important contributions to the team in the form of fine play and leadership.

"They are great kids," said Coach Greer. "They were tri-captains by unanimous consent and did an outstanding job. I wish they were coming back."

On his final season, Redding said, "I was disappointed that both the team and myself didn't do a little better, however, it was as good as any team I've been on since I was here. The freshmen have a way to go, but have already made a lot of progress. Watch out for them in the future.

Track team struggles to overcome lack of participation

Up and . . . over Davidson's pole vaulter reaches the new height and continues to the next round of competition.

The Davidson track team has usually been overshadowed by the more publicized baseball and tennis teams as a spring sport. The talent, coaching, and willingness is there, but "we don't have the athletes necessary to compete in enough events," lamented Coach Harris. Therefore, the 'Cats are usually beaten by colleges who have the athletes to enter more events than Davidson, thus accumulating more points.

Despite the odds, though, the 'Cats were very competitive and had a fine season. Coach Harris had to depend on some team members to compete in a variety of events and was often rewarded by outstanding performances. Most notable was freshman Greg Foreman, who displayed exhilarating speed in the 800 and 1500-meter runs. In the Southern Conference Championships Foreman set a new school record of 1:56.2 in the 800-meter run, eclipsing senior Frank Ivey's old record.

"The strongest part of our team was the 4 x 100 meter relay team," asserted Coach Harris. It consisted of junior Jim Walker, senior Paul Fry, and sophomores Jay Braun and Eric McClasty. This relay team was very competitive in every meet, and, at the SC Championships, set a school record of 43.4 seconds.

As for individual efforts, sophomore Jay Braun was definitely the team's outstanding performer. In addition to getting consistently high marks in the pole vault, Braun also competed in the javelin, long jump, and as a member of the 4 x 100 meter relay team.

The women's team, composed of senior Sharon Bryant, juniors Sarah Patterson, Susie Dresser, Susie Myers, and Alison Moy, and sophomore Judy Dalton, suffered much the same fate; not enough participants to win events. Nevertheless, Sarah Patterson was a dominant force in the 5000-meter run, while Judy Dalton performed consistently in the 800.

In the Davidson Relays, the highlight of the season, the men finished 14th out of 19 teams, and the women finished 8th of 10. The 4 x 100 relay team turned in another stellar showing, while junior Jeff Carter was third in the high jump and Jay Braun was fourth in the pole vault. The women's team was once again led by Sarah Patterson.

In assessing the year, Coach Harris noted that the 'Cats had become more competitive and had high hopes about next year.

Go ahead and jump!

Just when students were beginning to notice the time-back riding on the schedules as a way to fill a P.E. requirement, Nancy Hoffman, the director of the riding program, decided to take things a step further and begin an equestrian team. For students having any degree of experience in the saddle, this team provided the opportunity to ride and compete in shows.

Under the leadership of captain Julie Waters, the ten-member team began practicing almost immediately for competitions in Region IX of the Intercollegiate Horse Show Association. Other members of the region, including St. Andrew's, the College of Charleston, and the University of South Carolina, hosted shows throughout the eight-month season.

The team captured its first blue ribbon with Kelly Sundberg winning the Beginning Walk-Trot class at the December 19 show at Charleston. The highlight of the season came in April, when Davidson hosted the last show of the regular season. Not only did it turn out to be one of the most competitive shows of the season for all seven teams attending, but four Davidson riders, Sundberg, Trish Lennon, Kat Lehman, and Sheryl Aikman, won blue ribbons in their classes. In addition, Janice Evans, with a second place finish in the Advanced Walk-Trot class, earned enough points to go to the Regional show in South Carolina. At this competition she took champion of the division and earned a trip to the National Intercollegiate Show in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania.

For a year-old organization, the team fared well, in spite of various problems. In addition to the fundamental difficulty of finances with the team and the riding program itself, Waters noted the need for more riders to represent the team in all levels of competition, particularly in the Advanced Hunt Seat and Stock Seat divisions.

Nevertheless, Waters and Hoffman hope for more student involvement to secure the riding program as a permanent part of the athletic department. The team's first year roster consisted of freshman Sheryl Aikman, and Kat Lehman, sophomores Julie Waters, Janice Evans, Trish Lennon, Laura Raney and Jan Withers; and juniors Kelly Sundberg, Mandy Dotson, and Susan Moore.

Tenacious young 'Cats hold on to winning season

"Tenacious is the only team," said Coach Frank of his team. Though of the same ilk as such teams as Penn State and Wake Forest the 'Cats hustled like never before, returned sure-winners, and often clawed by on sheer will power. Despite difficulties early in the season, the tenacious 'Cats stormed on to a 15-8 record, 5-2 in the Southern Conference. Of the more impressive victories were the 6-3 shocker over Penn State, a 4-5 heartbreak to perennial powerhouse Wake Forest, and the 8-1 drubbing of East Tennessee prior to the tournament.

Lunging at the ball, junior John Hackett demonstrates the Cat's scrappy style of play.

The Evil Eye, Coach Jeff Frank keeps a watchful eye on his young team.

Despite disappointing early-round losses in the SC tournament, Davidson came in third. The highlight was junior Sedge Gray, who was runner-up in the singles championship. "Sedge really came on late in the season," commented Coach Frank on his number two player, "and he had an excellent tournament." Gray had won the title the year before.

Overall, the 'Cats were a very young team. Aside from Gray and senior Mark Nottingham and junior John Hackett, the rest of the team consisted of sophomores and freshmen. Yet this youthful corps had plenty of talent, especially freshman Hayes Dallas, the number-one seed. Sophomores Craig Hall and Bob Nichols rounded out the top six.

Coach Frank is highly optimistic about next year. He will have several returning players plus five top recruits. Yet this pales to the new tennis facility he will have at his disposal. As of next spring, a separate building, housing four courts and a spectator mezzanine, will be located near the soccer field. "It will be one of the best college tennis facilities in the nation," said Coach Frank. In addition to being the new home of the tennis 'Cats, the indoor courts will be open to all students, highlighting tennis as a part of life at Davidson.

Thirty years ago, tennis at Davidson reached an all-time high. Under the coaching of Dick McKee, the 'Cats burst onto the Southern Conference tennis circuit with unprecedented firepower. Led by left-hander Lacy Keesler, team captain and returning top-seed, the team rolled through the season and into the SC tournament. Keesler himself handily won the singles title while teammates George Snead and Corvin "Corky" Clark won the doubles competition. Senior Johnny Bremer rounded out the team effort with an impressive showing. Later in the year Keesler won the North Carolina men's singles title while he also won the double's title with his brother Dewey.

As remarkable as the '54 season was in itself, the next year was even better. The '55 season saw the three returning stars once again dominate the conference circuit. Though Keesler was injured early in the season, Corky Clark picked up the slack as the team captain. Furthermore, Clark led the 'Cats on to a clean sweep of the SC tournament. Clark won the singles title against, of all people, teammate Lacy Keesler. In the doubles tournament, Clark and Keesler proved to be an invincible tandem as they cruised to claim the title. In just two years the 'Cats had won two singles and two doubles titles in conference play.

Upon graduation in 1955 Keesler, Clark, and Snead enlisted in the army and went their separate ways. Keesler is still very active in tennis and often competes in tournaments. "I'm going to play tennis as long as I can because this is the greatest game in the world," he once remarked. The lively left-hander has won several club championships. Dewey is also an active player and the Keesler brothers often form an intimidating doubles team with their aggressive style of play.

Corky Clark and George Snead, now Dr. Snead, also play tennis as a pastime. Though their championship days are over, each recognizes that tennis is a lifetime sport suitable for everyone.

The Golden Age — 1970s

First national championship in college history!

Stepping up to meet the ball, senior Adelyn Lutz returns a powerful, well-placed shot.

Returning serve, Wildcat Debbie Podolin delivers a scorching backhand shot to her opponent.

Caroline Brown's second season as coach of the women's tennis team was one filled with victories, not the least being the NCAA Division III national championship. The regular season's record of 16-5 included wins over Appalachian, Furman, and Marshall.

The team's most impressive feat, however, was their Division III victory. The team is the first in college history to win a national championship. Even more surprising was the fact that this was the team's first national tournament appearance ever.

The championship was also the first national title in athletics for any Mecklenburg County team. In recognition, Charlotte Mayor Harvey Gantt declared May 15 "Davidson College NCAA Division III National Tennis Champions Day," and members of the college honored the team in an outdoor ceremony in front of Chambers.

The tennis team looks forward to a strong future although there is concern about losing seniors Eleanor Knobloch (no. 2), Adelyn Lutz (no. 4), and Sue Hilton. They hope to travel back to Nationals a second time, defending their well-earned title.

Concentrating on each point, the team's number one player, Carolyn Barclay, racks up another win for the Cats.

Playing her last season for Davidson, senior Sue Hilton has been an outstanding asset to the tennis team.

Caroline Barclay, Eleanor Knobloch, Adelyn Lutz, Lolly Johnson, Tricia Ives, Debbie Podolin, Sue Hilton, Sarah Patterson, Patricia Hahn, Jill Syputt, and Mary Griffith. Do you know these women? You should: they are the first sports team in the 147-year history of Davidson to win a national championship.

The women's tennis team arrived at Kalamazoo, Michigan, in early May to make their first appearance in a national tournament, the NCAA Division III. Despite being newcomers, second-year coach Caroline Brown never doubted that the 'Cats would have a chance of winning. "Everyone thought we were the dark horse," said Brown, "but I was not surprised when we won."

Victory, though, did not come easily. Davidson (17-6 on the season) won by a single point over California-San Diego and was not assured the victory until Johnson and Ives won the No. 2 Doubles title over Cal-San Diego. Furthermore, the Nos. 1 and 2 'Cats, Barclay and Knobloch, did not advance to the final round of play. Instead, Coach Brown had to rely on Lutz (no. 3), Johnson (no. 4), and Podolin (no. 6) for the winning final effort.

"The wonderful thing," stressed Brown, "is that every player on the team contributed at least a point in the tournament, and we won by a single point. Though NCAA rules allow only a six-member team in the tournament, all eleven girls contributed. It was undoubtedly a team effort."

Upon completion of the tournament, several team members competed for individual honors. Senior Eleanor Knobloch placed in the top sixteen in the country, sophomore Caroline Barclay in the top eight, and the doubles team of Johnson and Ives roled through the competition until losing in the finals.

What of next year? Will there be an encore? "Definitely!" said Brown. "We won't be distracted by past wins. We want a repeat performance!"

Congratulations to the new NCAA national champs!!

Lady 'Cats win national championship!

Wildcat showmanship boosts morale

Bill Swift and Lorelei Kief lead the routines as they cheer for the 'Cats.

Lacking a sponsor at the start of the 1983-84 season, the co-captains of the cheerleading squad, Lauren Hightower and George Thompson, carried a heavy burden. Baseball coach, George Greer offered to help out.

The open tryouts for the squad were held late last winter to choose this year's members. After tryouts, the cheerleaders began training in the spring and continued independently over the summer. They attended a Universal Cheerleading Association camp at Virginia Tech for a week in August where they learned new cheers, stunts, and dances and also gathered ideas on spirit-raising activities.

Fundraisers this year included their annual Spring Car Wash and Fall Barbeque.

At the start of the season, the squad consisted of seven couples, but several members were lost to injury and to other activities.

Under the strong leadership, time, and effort put forth by the co-captains, the skill of the cheerleaders greatly improved.

In the future the cheerleaders hope to travel to more away football and basketball games, but to do so they need more financial support from the athletic department.

Despite early problems, the cheerleaders had a successful year cheering for the Wildcats.

ACADEMICS

"I am convinced that it is of primordial importance to learn more every year than the year before. After all, what is education but a process by which a person begins to learn how to learn?"

Peter Ustinov, Dear Me

You're taking what?! (Requirements.)

According to the College catalogue, one must "be of good character and conduct" and, of course, "discharge all college financial obligations" in order to graduate. Above and beyond this rather stringent stipulation, there are other equally difficult academic requirements.

In order to receive one's diploma, one must complete at least 36 courses and compile at least 72 grade points, the equivalent of a C average. For some, this total is not possible the first time around. Students often engage in bargaining sessions with the registrar and attend multiple summer sessions in hopes of fulfilling their requirements.

These scary limits known as "area requirements" encompass the College's four areas of study: language and literature, music and fine arts; religion and philosophy; science and mathematics; and social science. Three courses in each area will satisfy one's requirements; students who choose to take the two-year Humanities course receive two credits in each area.

Perhaps the most elusive of graduation requirements, however, is that of physical education. Not only does the definition change yearly, but Davidson students must also fulfill part of this requirement for entrance into their junior year. For those who wait until spring term sophomore year to write "Ped" on their registration forms, they can only cross their fingers and hope that the computer is kind to them.

The Class of 1987 must show proficiency in one lifetime sport (what does this mean?), one team sport, one individual sport, and one water-related sport. The choices, from juggling to canoeing to ballet, are diverse. For most, it shouldn't be a problem.

Nonetheless, we wish the members of every class luck at meeting these requirements. If the Davidson formula works well, one will enjoy the benefits of a Liberal Arts education after graduation. And not only will a Davidson grad be a good conversationalist at parties, but he will also be a good swimmer!

Studying: Davidson-Style

Studying: the Wildcat Handbook tried to prepare us for it, defining such terms as "reviews" and "all-nighter;" Hall counselors warned us of falling behind after three days of classes; but, eventually, we all heard the complaining, nagging, and begging for mercy from fellow students.

At Davidson, studying takes on more forms than there are students. First of all, there is a choice of places in which to study. Dorm rooms can be lethal to the concentration, and the library can be hazardous to the sanity. Consider, however, the following study settings: the Union, the dorm lounge, Chambers, Lingle Chapel in DCPC, any place in the sun, and the hall outside the dorm room when the roommate is asleep. This leads to another variable: hours, as in lots of them. The question is, "When?" No time is sacred. Some students will spend every afternoon with the books in the days before a test. Cramming, however, is a much more common option, and for many, all-nighters are inevitable.

Aside from the basic learning of material, how does one mentally prepare for upcoming academic stress? Answers range from calming, with Chris Suhr's, "Meditate," to adrenalin-generating, with Howie Moyes: "Panic!"

Others found the wonders of drink helpful. Tom Ghirardelli explained, "I party like a madman. A good stiff drink lets me get a good night's sleep." Anne Lambert, on the other hand, takes her frustrations out on her stuffed Smurf. For Garry Banks, test preparation means footwork — tracking down spots. The self-proclaimed King of Spots lives by the gospel, "If a professor's spotable, you get spots," and states that he once had fifteen spots for a Chemistry 31 test.

Studying is rarely fatal, but it is worse than the common cold, stomach flu, or mono; neither drugs, bed rest, nor the infirmary can help. It is, however, a chance to express individualism in one's own special rituals. As a last resort, there is one more Wildcat Handbook definition; when it's fourth down and two reviews and a paper to go, PUNT!

—Janice Evans

Late night research is appealing for some; others disagree.

It is easy to tell when there is a music 121 test coming up, the music lab fills with students

A Walkman and a gingerale make a late night typing job a little more tolerable and much less tiresome for Phred Huber.

The hometown newspaper is often a welcome break from the rigors of study.

An alternative to the private carrel, tables give the library its reputation as the social center of Davidson.

"Let learning be cherished where liberty has arisen:" whether Davidson is on the semester or trimester system, the educating process goes on.

Trimesters: Love 'em or leave 'em?

Just a year ago, the headline proclaimed Davidson was "shaking up the system." On October 19, 1982, the faculty voted to switch from trimesters to semesters. The printing presses putting out both pro and con propaganda stopped; students threw in the towel after the faculty's apparent disregard for the 77.2% student majority in favor of trimesters. Chemistry professors donned black armbands, mourning the "death" of the department, which they felt would be unable to accommodate the number of students the semester system would force into its labs.

At the beginning of the 1983-84 academic year, however, there was a renewal of the debate. The possibility of returning to trimesters did not get better, but the semester system was having problems developing.

When the faculty approved the 1984-1985 calendar, the SGA sprung into action with the Semester Implementation Committee expressing its distaste for the system which allowed only six days for exams and dropped reading days.

The credit-hours system became a hot issue as well. In November the faculty decisively reversed its original May 3 vote in favor of the credit-hours proposal. Since a credit-hours system could potentially account for the extra hours required for science and foreign language courses, many students thought that having credit hours was the actual purpose of having semesters.

Without the system to make up for discrepancies in the amount of hours spent in the classroom, students faced taking five classes one semester of the year; this five-course semester would be necessary to get the mandatory 36 courses required for graduation.

Others thought the plan was a hassle; as Margaret McKibben commented, "I think it's really sad they tried to rate one field of study against another."

Problems continued to appear. To complicate matters, the faculty had only until the January 1 deadline, the date on which the 1984-85 catalog goes to press, to iron out all of the difficulties. Seeing the potential infeasibility of semesters, about one-fourth of the faculty signed a petition to challenge the implementation of the semester system. Students returned for winter term to learn that the faculty was voting on the fate of the semester system. Their choices were to keep the system, to delay the change for one year, or to stay with trimesters indefinitely.

The debate started again: the student propaganda reappeared on the bathroom walls, the SGA circulated a petition, and The Davidsonian published a special edition dealing solely with the semester system problem. The issue presented editorials, letters to the editor, and articles about both the faculty's and the SGA's actions.

The year-long debate ended with a 68-37-1 faculty vote for keeping trimesters indefinitely. Reactions were mixed. Some, including SGA president Hunter Moore, cried out that the college had wasted time only to change nothing. But the editors of The Davidsonian wrote, "It may have seemed like a waste of time, but the school is wiser for it." Relief was much more common than outrage.

John Kelton, chairman of the Psychology Department, gave the classic response in The Davidsonian: "I'm glad we're through, I'm just tired of it."

Sophomores expressed relief in seeing that they would not be caught in a new system just as they began work on their majors. Elizabeth Simpson stated her true feelings when she declared, "I think it's fantastic. I can still make it home for breaks." So we still have a system that none of our friends back home on semesters understand, spring break is still better scheduled for a ski vacation than a beach trip, and we'll still have work to do over Christmas break. In spite of our oddness, high school seniors still apply to Davidson in large numbers, U.S. News & World Reports ranked us ninth among liberal arts colleges, and we're still getting an education.

Instead of becoming nostalgic over trimesters, we continue to face three classes a term, three terms a year: simple academia. The learning process is hard to stop, no matter what calendar one follows.

Junior John Ponder celebrates his birthday in Marburg while spending the year abroad

JYA students in Marburg join the Germans in braving a typically cold afternoon.

JYA: More than just a trip abroad

Junior Year Abroad (JYA) is much more than a trip. In fact, it's more than spending the junior year at a foreign university. JYA is, overall, a tremendous growing experience.

By studying in a foreign country one learns many new and different things. Along with mixing with the people of other cultures and learning a foreign language there are many opportunities for travel and for partaking in the riches of "the old world." All of these things combine to make JYA a special time of growth.

In such a situation, one cannot help but undergo some personal development. During the year abroad one is constantly confronted with new and often unusual circumstances which call for self-reliance. "There's nobody to do anything for you except yourself," says Jane Thompson ('84, JYA France). "If you don't understand something, you have to ask about it; if you want to do something you have to figure out how."

Sometimes it takes quite a bit of courage to make JYA be what you want it to be; sometimes it takes even more courage to decide to actually go. Wherever a Davidson student spends a year abroad, he is the foreigner, the stranger, and the one who stammers over his words. The "natives" might be cold or might laugh, but the student has to be brave enough to overcome such an obstacle. Only by speaking does one learn to speak and only by effort can one succeed. With each success, one gains confidence; self-confidence is one of the strongest assets to be gained from the year abroad.

The curriculum in foreign universities is another positive aspect of JYA. The courses deal with subjects one normally cannot study at Davidson, such as the conservation of nature, linguistics, or American history from their point of view. Regardless of the subject, one studies it in another language, an exciting way to study and truly learn a foreign tongue.

Perspective is another quality gained during the JYA experience. "By being away from Davidson for a while, I could see more objectively what it has to offer and how I can personally gain more from this while I'm still here," realized Scott Otto. One gains perspective not only on Davidson but also on the United States. After all, the U.S. is just one country among many. Most students returned home with a deeper appreciation of their country and the advantages it offers.

Students' personal perspectives are also widened. "I gained a new perspective on myself," reflects Shannon Anderson. "I had to learn how to make myself happy and then stay that way. There are no court parties over there, and entertainment is only organized if you plan it yourself. It's important to put your life — hopes, priorities, education, goals — all into perspective, otherwise you really can't go about benefiting from anything."

JYA, then, is more than a trip. It's growing, being confident, learning, and gaining self-perspective. Most of all, it's what you choose to make of it.

Fall term at the beach

While most students spent fall term in the cold and rain of Davidson, 18 students soaked in the sun and fun of Duke University Marine Lab in Beaufort, N.C. Spending a term on the beach and receiving full credit for it may seem incredible, but academia was not escaped entirely.

With biology professor Dr. David Grant as teacher, advisor, and friend and Walter Garstang as spiritual mentor, each student took the Lower Invertebrates Zoology class, participated in a Marine Biology seminar, and completed an independent research project, with reports ranging from "Variations in the Regional Sensitivity of the Mantle in the Initiation of Escape Response of Argopectin irradians concentricus" to "Cryptic Coloration and Adaptive Behavior in Simnia uniplicata on varied color phases of Leptogorgia."

The Lower Invertebrates lab was not only highly educational but also very enjoyable. The opportunity to find specimens in their natural habitat, to collect good-sized examples of these specimens, and to observe them was an integral part of the learning process. Lab experiences included boat trips to surrounding waters and nearby islands and occasional excursions to mud flats and salt marshes.

Along with the academic opportunities, one of the most valuable aspects of the Beaufort program is the geographic location. The students took advantage of their term away by spending time in historic Beaufort at such places as Clawson's "Museum of Art" and the Dockhouse, "a marina for ancient sailing vessels;" both locations serve the additional purpose of providing liquid nourishment. Cape Lookout National Seashore Park, Bird Shoals, and Town Marsh were also included in free-time activities. Trips were made to the Outer Banks for fishing and body surfing and to Wilmington for sailing and shrimpeating.

The research environment of the marine lab provided a number of opportunities to get involved in and learn about recent events in the scientific community. These included participating in the Symposium on Advances in Analytical Electron Microscopy and talking with such people as Dr. John Young, one of the leading researchers in octopus behavior, and Nobel laureate George Palade.

A few other memorable events also highlighted the term. Several landlubbers of the group tried their hands at boating and proceeded to dilapidate a good portion of the Marine Lab vessels, in addition to decommissioning the entire Davidson research fleet.

The nightlife at Beaufort offered a wide range of opportunities which were thoroughly exhausted by the group. Get-togethers took place on the dock, in the biochemistry lab, and even in the library.

Dorm life was also a unique experience due to the close quarters of the house. Sleep was hard to come by; often one person tiptoeing through the dorm was enough to bring a nap to a quick end.

The best aspect of the entire term was the group itself. The unique circumstances resulted in a tight-knit group, and the students will carry these memories and friendships with them for a long time.

Tea for 24!

For over seven hundred years scholars throughout Europe have flocked to Cambridge, England, to study at one of the world's greatest universities. Every summer a small group of Davidson students are offered the chance to live and study in this historic setting through the Davidson Summer Programme at Cambridge.

According to Dr. Malcolm Lester, Director of the programme, one of the objectives is to "simulate as closely as possible the British style of university education" at Wolfson College, Cambridge. The focus of the programme is the Age of Revolution and Romanticism in English History and Literature, 1760-1832. Throughout the six weeks at Wolfson College, students attend 24 lectures given by Cambridge fellows as well as guests from the Universities of London and Oxford. In addition to the required lectures, students participate in small tutorial sessions in English and History. Professor J.C.D. Clark, known as the "Peterhouse Demigod," emerged as the group's favorite tutor.

The work load is intentionally kept light so that participants have ample time to mingle with the British students. Senior Sloan Warner describes them as "always interesting and friendly". Furthermore, no classes are scheduled on Fridays so students have long weekends which allow them time enough to see much of England. Most of the group took weekend trips to such scenic and historic places as Canterbury, Bath, York, and the Lake District. A few went as far as Scotland or Wales on weekends.

And of course, London, which is an hour's train ride from Cambridge, offers an infinitude of museums, restaurants, and theatres. Oftentimes the group took the train to London for supper and a play.

Two of the most successful productions of the summer were Children of a Lesser God and The Real Thing.

"Rock concerts were big," added Bill Hall, who saw Dire Straits at the Royal Albert Hall. Perhaps the biggest show of the year was that of Echo and the Bunnymen, one of Britain's newest and most spectacular bands.

Apart from the educational and cross cultural benefits of the course, Warner believes that one of the greatest advantages of the programme is simply spending time with other Davidson students "in a more relaxed atmosphere."

Classicists explore ancient ruins

Dr. George Labban, who retired in 1984, has been leading students on the Classics Seminar Abroad for 14 years. While reading appropriate books and writing reaction-type reports, students experience the beauty of the Greek and Italian settings.

The Classics seminar abroad offers the student a chance to study the civilizations of Greece and Italy while exploring the two countries. Dr. Labban leads his class through ancient ruins in Athens, the Peloponnese, and Crete.

For one week the group disbands and the members individually explore areas of Greece and the Middle East which hold special interest for them. Favorite choices include the Egyptian pyramids, the monasteries of Mt. Athos, Israel, and the Greek islands.

After a five week stay in Greece, Dr. Labban sails with his charges to Italy. The group adopts a high-paced, urban lifestyle in its study of the ancient, medieval, and modern inhabitants of the Italian peninsula.

Throughout the exciting ten-week seminar Dr. Labban rarely allows his students to forget their scholastic goals, yet he intersperses periods of great concentration with surprises of Italian ice cream and impromptu trips to the beach.

For the Davidson student, the spring in classics abroad is a time of serious learning, cultural expansion, and tremendous fun.

Students learn about Indian culture

On August 17, 1983, a group of Davidson students left for the Fall-term program in India. They stayed eight weeks in Madras at the Hotel Kanchi, a non-western vegetarian establishment, while they studied at the University of Madras. The DC students attended lectures, conducted independent studies, and studied Tamil, the language of the state of Tamil Nadu. The long stay in Madras proved a valuable experience for the group, giving them the chance to become accustomed to the culture and the new environment and to avoid the tourist traps. In October they went on a week-long tour of Tamil Nadu. The final two and one-half weeks of their stay were spent travelling around India; stops included Bombay, Aurangabad, Delhi, Jaipur, Agra, and Banaras. Highlights of the term were seeing a Hindu wedding, festivals, and native dances; visiting the Buddhist Hindu Caves, the Taj Mahal, several villages, a tool and a bicycle factory, and the Ganges River; and meeting Indira Gandhi and many Indian students.

Spring in Spain

In the spring of 1983, nine students from Davidson participated in the school's spring term in Spain: Miles Ardaman, Lisa Cash, Tamara Foreman, Lou Hamilton, Lauren Hightower, Joe Jaworski, Pete Jarretta, Caroline Leavitt, and Todd Pierce. The group travelled together for two weeks, stopping at Avila, Salamanca, Granada, Cordoba, and Sevilla.

They then moved on to Madrid, where they lived with Spanish families and studied for eight weeks. Each student took three courses at San Luis University: civilization, grammar, and art. One course was taught by an accompanying professor from Davidson, and the other two, by professors at the university.

Each student had two "tutors"; the tutors included the Americans in much of their social activities. This program helped them to meet Spanish college students and to learn their customs and habits. They travelled every weekend and so made the most of their short stay abroad.

Interim President Johnston: a familiar Davidson face

Interim President Dr. Frontis Johnston is no stranger to Davidson: he has been associated with the College in one mode or another for over 30 years.

Dr. Frontis Johnston first came to Davidson as a freshman in 1926, nearly 60 years ago, while "new Chambers" was still under construction. He graduated in the class of 1930. Dr. Johnston began his teaching career at Davidson in 1935. He earned his Ph.D. from Yale in 1938 and became a full professor of history in 1941.

Johnston has been involved in teaching at Davidson on a parttime basis since 1977. As recently as Spring term 1983, he taught a seminar on the New Deal. It is said that he has taught more students at Davidson than any other member of the faculty in the College's history. His American history courses have always been popular among the students, especially for those interested in the Civil War and the New South.

Dr. Johnston was dean of the faculty, serving from 1958 to 1970 and again from 1975 to 1977. He served as the first dean of the Honors College, now the Center for Special Studies. Johnston also filled the office of Academic Vice President from 1975 until his "retirement" in 1977. He has received many honors over the years, including two fellowships from Yale, the presidency of the Southern Conference in 1957-60, and the Davidson College Distinguished Alumnus' Award in 1980.

A familiar face at Davidson for over 50 years, Dr. Frontis Johnston is as much a part of the nostalgia of the College as Eu and Phi Halls, the Old Quadrangle, and the College church. He is a part of Davidson that makes this campus a special place to be. Alongside the other wonderful faculty and students, he has helped make Davidson what it is today.

Kuykendall steps in as president, "willing to learn"

Contrary to the popular belief that a pal election had been completed, the newly installed DCPC bells pealed wildly in an announcement that the trustees had selected John Kuykendall '59 as the 15th president of Davidson College. Apparently aware of the circulating jokes about the bells and the reported white smoke, Kuykendall commented in his first address to the college community that his presidency "would never assume pontifical dimensions."

The brief February 24 introduction ceremony in Love, followed by a luncheon catered by the Commons, represented the culmination of the trustees' year-long presidential search. Presidential Search Committee chairman Ben Craig '54 presented Kuykendall as "the one best person in the world to lead Davidson College." In the eyes of the trustees, this may be true: Kuykendall was selected from among over 300 applicants.

Kuykendall, who comes to the presidency after heading the religion department at Auburn University, is intimately acquainted with Davidson. A 1959 cum laude Davidson graduate, Kuykendall served as assistant dean of students at Davidson from 1960 until 1962. While a student here, he served as SGA president and Lieutenant Colonel in ROTC. He was a member of Who's Who, Omicron Delta Kappa, Scabbard and Blade, Philanthropic Literary Society, varsity soccer, and Phi Beta Kappa.

In addition to his ties with the College, Kuykendall has maintained close ties with the Presbyterian Church. He received his bachelor of divinity degree from Union Theological Seminary in 1964 and his master of sacred theology from Yale Divinity School in 1965. Before joining the religion department at Auburn University in 1970, Kuykendall acted as its Presbyterian campus pastor. In 1975 Kuykendall received his Ph.D. in American Religion from Princeton University. He was also elected to the board of trustees of Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary. In addition, he is a member of the American Academy of Religion and the American Society of Church History.

Although Kuykendall's credentials are quite impressive, Search Committee chairman Ben Craig explained that the committee had no specific criteria for candidates in order to keep the total pool of applicants unrestricted. According to Craig, the committee looked mainly at the candidates' Christian commitment and their views on the College's Statement of Purpose. When asked in an interview with The Davidsonian what immediate changes Kuykendall would make, committee members declined comment. Religion professor David Kaylor explained, "It would not be good style to announce the agenda of change . . . Kuykendall will bring a period of consolidation to Davidson."

In his first address to the College Kuykendall seemed amiable and open to suggestion, "I come as one willing to learn . . . I hope you will find me educable — if not a quick study."

Trustees take part in presidential search

It was a red-letter year for the Davidson trustees for they had the formidable task of selecting a new president. After a year of interviews, they found John W. Kuykendall, who will become the 15th president of the college. Kuykendall will assume his duties in July.

According to trustee chairman Fred Stair, the trustees worked intensely with interim president Frontis Johnston throughout this transition period. They met monthly to communicate and to coordinate responsibilities.

At the May 4 Board of Trustees meeting, Stair reported, trustees reviewed security problems of students living off-campus and set in motion a proposal for the construction of new dorms.

They also planned the next board meeting, at which students, faculty and administration can join in the preparation of plans for Davidson's sesqui-centennial celebration in 1987.

This meeting was preceded by the May 3 dinner meeting with selected students and administration, held at the Commons. Stair said that the trustees always look forward to such contact with the students and benefit from student input generated by the SGA's Trustee Contact Committee.

Development

Unfortunately, students' tuition covers only a fraction of the costs associated with a college education. Like all private colleges, Davidson must rely heavily upon private gifts and grants for financial support. It is the task of the Development Office, headed by Jack Powers, to recruit such support. The Development Office is the backbone of the 1987 Program — a long-term fund-raising project culminating with Davidson's 150th anniversary.

International Education

Study abroad is an excellent opportunity for students to broaden their perspectives on politics, education, and life in general. Adding to the spectrum of a liberal arts education, the International Education Office, directed by Hansford Epes, sponsors programs at the University of Montpellier, at Philipps University, Marburg, in England, India, Spain, Mexico, and Greece. Although these are the most popular programs, any fully accredited international academic program is acceptable for Davidson students.

Center For Special Studies

Providing for a myriad of student abilities and interests, the Center for Special Studies is the answer for those who wish to study independently, work on interdisciplinary topics, and design their own major. The opportunities offered include seminars, tutorials, and the counseling and supervisory skills of the Center's faculty for the "design-your-own-major" program. Center director Louis Ortmayer notes the importance of interdisciplinary study and self-directed work, and is concerned with involving not only the Center majors but the general student body in the Center's program.

Computer Center

As computers become increasingly available to students and faculty on campus, the need has arisen for a facility to maintain the terminal and oversee general operations. The Computer Service Center not only satisfied this need, but also teaches computer technology to faculty members and provides a computer operations manual for Davidson's PRIME computers.

A-V Services

Run by only one permanent staff member, director Ruth Pittard, the Audio-Visual Center handles the college's films and slides and performs darkroom work for the faculty. In addition, the department provides for some needs of students. It manages the tape supply of the language lab and employs work-study students and projectionists. The various services provided by the center revolve around the language lab and the central location on the third floor of Chambers.

In addition to providing a 24-hour study room and terminals to the campus computer, the library houses nearly 300,000 volumes and receives over 1,500 periodicals and over 70 daily papers. Directed by Dr. Leland Park, it employs seven librarians and over fifty students. The E.H. Little Library boasts a books-to-student ratio which is the second highest in the state of North Carolina.

The Admissions Office keeps especially busy during the fall months with interviews and recruiting trips. Under Griffith the Office has revitalized the Student Admissions Teams and begun the Davidson Alumni Program, an organization geared toward active involvement by alumni in the recruitment of prospective students.

Dean of Financial Aid Kathleen Stevenson oversees the vital duties of the Financial Aid Office. Davidson offers financial aid to any student who expresses the need. In addition, Will directs the Honor Council, and Sue is a part-time English professor.

WDAV

John Clark and the WDAV staff team up to provide Davidson and the entire Charlotte area with an alternative to top-40 music. "Your radio for the arts," WDAV (89.9 FM) is a non-commercial public radio station operating from the ground floor of the College Union. The station employs seven full-time staff members and also utilizes a support staff of thirty.

Davidson's Security officers are (l to r): Sgt. F. Wayne King, John M. Griffin, Tim G. Ramsey, Sgt. Henry H. Cook, and Chief Jackie Hughes.

Dr. Mange examines senior Terry Kurts during daily sick call at the infirmary.

Security

It is a dark and stormy night. You walk across the college campus when around the corner two lights come glaring toward you. But not to fear, it's only a policeman patrolling the grounds in his Cushman. As he whizzes by, the policeman waves and smiles.

Patrolling the campus is just part of the daily duties of Davidson's Public Safety Department. Captain Jackie Hughes and patrolmen Henry Cook, Johnny Griffin, Tim G. Ramsey, and Wayne King also have the responsibility of identification cards, parking decals, fire extinguishers, and, yes, even those dreaded parking tickets. With few disturbances and a crackdown on thefts, they can concentrate on overall campus safety. With policemen like Captain Hughes and his men on duty, you can rest assured that you are secure at Davidson.

Dorothy Sherrill, Supervisor of the Infirmary, and her staff take care of Davidson's sick and injured.

Infirmary

The Infirmary is responsible for meeting the health needs of Davidson students. A nurse is on duty and a doctor is on call 24 hours a day. Dr. Williams, Dr. Mange, or Dr. Caudill sees patients during sick call which is held from 1-3 P.M. daily, although any student needing to see the doctor should arrive before 2:30. The three doctors average nearly 3,000 appointments per school year.

Thomas Cartmill directs Davidson's physical education program and also coaches golf.

Emil Parker, Director of Sports Information, is Davidson's link to the media.

Baseball coach George Greer anticipates the upcoming game.

Sterling Martin serves as cross country coach in addition to coordinating intramural athletics.

Athletics

Over twenty percent of Davidson students play intercollegiate sports. The Athletic Department, led by director Ed Farrell, sponsors women's basketball, field hockey, track, cross country, sailing, and tennis teams. Men participate in basketball, football, tennis, soccer, baseball, track, cross country, sailing, golf, and wrestling teams. According to the catalogue, the Department "emphasizes the carry-over value of sports plus the importance of physical attributes in a person's development."

Football coach Ed Farrell discusses the next set of downs with one of his assistant coaches

Patty Daley talks to her field hockey players after a hard fought first half.

Vince Arduini serves as coach and motivator for the "Wildcat Ten."

Erik Christensen, the sound and lighting technician, handles much of the technical side of union productions.

Union

As the social center of the campus, the College Union provides a wide variety of activities — recreational and cultural — for both students and staff. The Union Board arranges the social calendar for the many events that take place on campus, including films, dances, concerts, games, lectures, and the annual Artist Series.

William Brown, Director of the College Union, oversees the various operations of the Union and keeps it all organized.

Ann Parker, the coordinator of programs, schedules bands and other Union presentations.

Jim Perry, the night operations manager, locks the building up and keeps it running in the late hours.

Linda Daniels, the Union secretary, keeps Union appointments and engagements in order.

Tod Cowdery, the operations manager, works with high-tech machinery for Union video productions, etc.

Comptroller

Although usually recognized only as the receiving end of tuition payments, the Comptroller's Office also has the endless task of seeing that all infirmity debts, campus parking tickets, and library fines are paid by the end of the academic year. In addition, the office, directed by Robert Davidson is the place where all students on the work-study program look forward to picking up their monthly paychecks.

Comptroller Robert Davidson handles finances and expenditures for the College.

Food Service

Vail Commons serves all freshmen and upperclassmen who choose not to eat at a Patterson Court eating house. The Commons feeds a total of approximately 420 students. Carleton Pritchard, the director, and his staff work hard to provide nutritious and varied meals. They are also willing to make improvements, such as the addition of microwave ovens for student use this year.

Carleton Pritchard manages all aspects of Davidson's food service, including the Vail Commons, the Union Cafe, and the catering service.

Student Store

Most people simply aren't as fascinated with the school store as I happen to be. My friends have learned not to go there with me. I tend to browse around the store as if I plan to spend the day. I start at the various ball point pens, magic markers, and highlighters, leisurely pass by the philosophy book section, and head for that hot spot of the Davidson fashion scene. That corner, which displays the various ways to show the world through your attire that you are a Davidson student, alumni, faculty member or fan, always proves itself worthy of the walk over to the Union. I usually justify the trip by picking up a hooded sweatshirt for Grandmother or a Wildcat rain jacket for dear old Dad.

I suppose I've always been fascinated by bookstores and the like, but the Student Store at Davidson is unique. The merchandise is all screaming "Davidson" at you in vivid red and black letters daring you to advertise your true loyalty. Your loyalty is shown not only through your wardrobe but through the notebooks, pens, folders, stationery, and bookbag that you carry with you every day. The icing on the cake is the fact that the employees accept my check

Business Manager

Business Manager Robert Currie serves as one of Davidson's biggest "men behind the scenes." As Director of the Business Office he is responsible for all of the College's assets. His duties include handling the College's insurance coverage, overseeing such auxiliary enterprises as the food service, and renting houses to the faculty. Currie also assists students directly by aiding the Patterson Court treasurers and serving as administrative adviser to the Publications Board.

Gail Hoke, secretary to Robert Currie, helps to keep things running smoothly in the Business Office.

without a biographical sketch.

Parents' Weekend and Homecoming as well as any football weekend are big days for business at the Student Store. The familiar little Wildcat bags are in everyone's hands; parents sport sweatshirts with the DC logo to be shown off back home; and alumni and fans purchase momentos of red and black to show where their collegiate basketball loyalties lie.

I've learned to keep myself away from my favorite store on busy days, waiting instead for a calm Tuesday afternoon when I can casually make my way around the shelves and stacks.

I suppose part of the Student Store's appeal is its variety of offerings. One can find everything from the necessities such as Johnson's Baby Shampoo to such luxuries as red and white pin-striped Davidson logo nightshirts. Of course, all the school supplies anyone could ever want are available, too. Another time to avoid a Student Store shopping spree, I've found, is at the beginning of the term, when the rush to buy books resembles a stampede of wild buffalo. I must admit, however, that at this time virtually no place on campus is safe.

The next time a friend tries to tell you that there is nothing to do at Davidson, teach him the joys of shopping the Student Store. Oh — don't forget the checkbook!

—Christi Hayes

As Director of Personnel and Administrative Services, Robert Stephenson oversees the Faculty Secretarial service, and the Central Service department.

Personnel

Being the largest employer in the area, the college employs not only faculty members and administration officials, but also those people who are responsible for maintaining the campus. These employees, who are paramount in the upkeep of the grounds and buildings, and who help out with typing and other various duties, are hired and managed by the Office of Personnel and Administrative Services. Under the direction of Robert J. Stephenson, the office has many important tasks, including that of providing fringe-benefit programs for the faculty and administration.

Now a haven for weary travelers, the Carnegie Guest House originally served as a library.

Grover Meetze, Director of the Physical Plant is in charge of planning and maintaining all of Davidson's physical facilities.

Guest House

The Carnegie Guest House offers a comfortable haven for parents, alumni, trustees, and other persons visiting Davidson. Under the administration of Janie French, the Guest House offers a relaxing, 19th-century atmosphere and a roomy, luxurious decor. The basement of the Carnegie Guest House is used as full-time housing for a number of students.

Laundry

The College Laundry Service, headed by Frances Beaver, provides students with an easy route to clean clothes. A mandatory $200 addition to each student's comprehensive fee gives him a laundry number and the right to have his laundry done each week. The laundry also provides sheets and pillowcases.

Alternatives to using the laundry service include the "self-help" method at washers and dryers in Watts and Little dormitories, the "pay and wait" method at the local laundrette, and the "take it to Mom" method for holidays and weekends.

Frances Beaver manages the Davidson College Laundry, which serves students, staff, and the community.

The sunset over DCPC is a familiar scene to many Davidson students.

Physical Plant

Most people that visit the campus are enchanted by its appearance. The brick pathways gracefully winding between the buildings and around the Court are all a result of the creative work of director Grover C. Meetze and the Physical Plant staff. All maintenance, grounds work, campus security, and construction is overseen by the physical plant and plans for future growth and continuing improvement are always in the making.

A Theatre Act Play

SET: RUPERT T. BARBER JR.'s office. The office of Rupert T. Barber Jr., Associate Professor of Theatre and Speech. The room is large for an office, with various posters of plays and Broadway shows adorning the walls. Dr. Barber is seated at a large table in the center of the room and is preparing to relate the story of his 20 years of experience with Davidson theatre to an Interested Student (IS), a writer for the Quips & Cranks.

ACT I: BEFORE DAVIDSON COLLEGE

IS: (with dramatic flair) Tell me, Dr. Barber, what were your experiences before coming to Davidson? (head tilts to one side, anxiously awaiting reply)

BARBER: (leaning back in chair and smiling confidently) After completing graduate school, I did a series of things. I taught one year of high school, then served in the Air Force for two years. Following my service, I earned my Masters at the University of Columbia and proceeded to teach three more years of high school before earning my PhD and TA at Louisiana State University. At that point, I came to teach at Davidson.

IS: (with sigh of amazement) Also became department head of Theatre and speech?

BARBER: Well, yes, I was the only Theatre instructor until Dr. Gardner came nine? years ago.

ACT II: SOUTH-EAST SIDE STORY OR RUPERT GOES TO DAVIDSON

IS: How many plays have you directed or worked with here?

BARBER: (pensively, not being able to count on fingers) About 50, including major productions, children's plays, mini-major productions, experimentals, and one-acts.

IS: How do you feel your talents are best utilized?

BARBER: (looking hopeful) Oh, through direction, I hope. (slight chuckle)

IS: What other theatre programs are you involved in on a community level or otherwise? (BARBER takes a deep breath, looking as though he is organizing a great number of thoughts.)

BARBER: In addition to the college theatre, I host a seminar in New York every year, alternating between students and non-students. I am chairman of the Board of the Terradiddle Players, a professional group of adult actors who perform for children in Charlotte. I am on the Board of Directors for the Davidson Community players and for the Davidson Artworks; I am summer director for the CPCC summer theatre; I have directed the Charlotte Town Players for three years; I am on the Advisory Committee for the educational program at Spirit Square in Charlotte; and I am on the Arts Advisory Committee for the Charlotte-Mecklenburg School System.

IS: Do you have any time for hobbies?

BARBER: Believe it or no', yes. I'm involved in children's playwriting, music and opera, and I'm presently working on an adult play.

ACT III: CHANGES IN DAVIDSON COLLEGE THEATRE SCENE 1: THE GHOST OF DAVIDSON COLLEGE THEATRE PAST

IS: What changes have been made since you arrived?

BARBER: One of the biggest changes was the development of the workshop theatre from a storage room to black box. And, of course, with that change we had more room to really experiment. With the change, we were not only allowed more freedom, but could even seat 100 people per performance.

IS: How do you feel about DC's drama department and the pool of talent you have had to draw from?

BARBER: The fact that nearly 20% of the student body is willing to participate in drama productions is phenomenal. The students are talented, as well as intellectually stimulating. The freedom given to the drama program by the administration, coupled with the exciting pool of student talent, provides many challenges that may not be found at other schools.

SCENE 2: THE GHOST OF DAVIDSON COLLEGE THEATRE TO COME

IS: What are your future plans?

BARBER: Well, the lack of facilities and staff can hinder things at times because there are so many willing, talented students that wanted to be used. If we had the facilities and staff, almost anything could be done. (IS, reflecting on her knowledge of Broadway shows and plays, pictures in her mind dancing scholars in a Davidson version of Chorus Line, a remake of 42nd Street into Main Street, and Cats as Frats. Realizing that DC has a long way to go before this transformation, IS leaves BARBER'S office as the lights fade and the performance ends.)

THE END (APPLAUSE)

Nelson works on several books

JOHN F. ENGELL, Assistant Professor of English, B.A. (Hamilton), M.A., Ph.D. (U.N.C.)

RANDY F. NELSON, Assistant Professor of English, B.A., M.A. (N.C. State), M.A., Ph.D. (Princeton)

Books are an integral part of life at Davidson. We study in the library surrounded by them, use them everyday in class, spend enormous sums of money to buy them each term, read them, highlight them, and depend on all kinds of books everyday. But how often does one stop and think about the person behind those books . . . a scholar like ourselves who has gathered his knowledge to share with others?

We are fortunate to have several published writers as professors at Davidson. Randy Nelson, an Associate Professor of English, is one of them. He has been a faculty member since 1977 and has recently published The Almanac of American Letters, " . . . a compendium of American literary trivia, anecdotes, and little-known facts, dating from the beginnings of our national literature to the present." The Almanac was picked as an Alternate Book of the Month Selection by the Quality Paperback Book Club and as a selection by a few smaller clubs. The reviews commended the book for its off-beat information and for being " . . . delightful recreational reading!"

Dr. Nelson is currently at work on a three-volume work about the correspondence of Henry David Thoreau. The book has been contracted by the Princeton University Press. Although it is not yet completed, the projected publication date is sometime in late 1984. Nelson is also working on a book about Thoreau's prose style, which is uncontracted at the moment.

All Davidson students know how hard it is to study and keep up with classes, but how many of us write books on the side? Nelson conceded that the time factor is important. In contrast to a large university where faculty members generally have graduate assistants, limited office hours, and fewer in-class responsibilities, the emphasis here is on interaction with and availability to students. Nelson does his writing over holidays, in the summer, in the afternoons, and late at night. "I don't sleep a lot," he said.

Mahony: the dynamics of religion

Hinduism has never been more appealing; co-eds have never been more interested in the history of religions.

Welcome, Dr. Mahony.

Dr. William Mahony is more than just an inducer of gasps. A Denver, Colorado native, Mahony sports an unusual educational and professional background.

Mahony's interest in southeast-Asian religions was born when, during his undergraduate years at Williams College, he journeyed to India: "a romantic place to go."

He traveled throughout the area, pursuing the "classical" pilgrimages and staying in Buddhist meditation centers and Hindu yoga centers.

As a result of his experiences, Mahony explains, "I became more and more interested in the structure and dynamics of religion itself. I wanted to know about religion as a human phenomenon."

After completing his B.A. at Williams, Mahony was attracted to the 3-year masters degree program of the Yale Divinity School. He also began studying Sanskrit — the ancient and sacred language of India — and served as the chaplain of a psychiatric ward.

His next move was cross-country to the University of California at Berkeley, where he continued his studies in Sanskrit and the history of religion.

Mahony then journeyed to the Midwest, where, at the University of Chicago, he earned his Ph.D. in the history of religion. His thesis was entitled "Flying Priests, Shamans, and Yogins in Ancient South Asia."

Mahony has continued his work on religious symbolism, metaphor, icon, magic, and alchemy in his position as editorial assistant for the journal History of Religions.

Mahony is also the author of twenty-five entries on Hinduism and Buddhism — from "Brahmaloka" to "Barabadur" in the Encyclopedia Britannica.

He is currently an assistant editor for the 16-volume International Encyclopedia of Religion, and is responsible for 250 articles on south-east Asian religions.

Dr. Mahony is, however, more than just a John D. MacArthur Assistant Professor of Religion at Davidson and more than just the president of the "history of religion" and "the religions of Asia" section of the American Academy of Religion, southeast region. He is a man "interested in cross-cultural studies in general."

Stell questions group rights

Do groups have rights? Does simply belonging to a specific group entitle an individual to certain fundamental rights? This is a problem that has bothered Dr. Lance Stell, associate professor of philosophy, for years.

He spent his entire sabbatical last year exploring the concepts of group and individual rights. Selected from a pool of 400 applicants, Dr. Stell was one of 35 scholars received as fellows of the National Humanities Center at the Research Triangle Park near Durham, North Carolina. The benefits of the fellowship included full financial support, relief from all teaching responsibilities, a staff of assistant researchers and the company of other scholars. But most importantly, a fellowship at the Center allows a scholar plenty of time — time to “write, think, and talk.” The Center attracts scholars from Spain, Poland, Australia, Great Britain, and Japan.

After brooding over his problem, Dr. Stell has reached the conclusion that a group has no basic, nonderivative rights. There is “no natural group that is morally important.”

Only individuals have such rights. Occasionally groups are granted rights, but these rights are the result of man-made institutions; they are not fundamental. The question of group rights has bothered Stell since 1976 when he first began to study the subject.

One practical question Stell asks is whether or not any group “has the right to a certain proportion of professional slots.” Similarly, does any group have the right to a specified number of positions in medical schools? Stell’s study also pertains to the government: is there moral justification for the filling of “quotas in legislature?”

Dr. Stell has still not finished studying all of the implications of his thesis, but he hopes one day to publish his findings in a book.

Classics seminar offers Mediterranean odyssey

"A traveling seminar devoted to the study of classical antiquity, developed by the Department of Classics is generally conducted each year . . . The academic program includes student directed instruction on location in Greece and in Italy. The professor conducting the seminar holds group sessions at selected archeological locations and museums." (Davidson College Catalog, 1983-84, p. 10.)

APRIL 12, 1983 (PATRA, GREECE): I'm sitting on the steps of the boat ticket place . . . guarding packs and sweating profusely. We left Olympia this morning . . . now we're waiting for the boat that'll take us to Brindisi, Italy. Leaving this country after five weeks . . . already?

I first talked with Professor Labban about the program's beginnings a few hours after I wrote that in my journal, once we set sail for Italy. Then I first began to understand the giant task of planning and developing the seminar. For each year's participants, it is a springtime sojourn through the Mediterranean. For Professor Labban, the trip represents more: it is the culmination of 14 years' work.

Dr. Labban started researching and planning the seminar closely in 1969 when he was living in Montpellier with the JYA group. President Spencer and the committee approved it in the winter of '69 and asked that he take a group in the spring of 1971 — which he did.

Students accompanying Dr. Labban on the trip, therefore, find themselves the guests of friends he has made in Greece and Italy throughout the past 14 years. Their friendliness and warmth make the trip a unique and very personal experience.

APRIL 18, 1983 (NAPLES, ITALY): Monday . . . little time for writing since we left Greece. After Brindisi, train ride through

Campania on the way here. Beautifully green and hilly — umbrella pines and poplars accent the landscape. Grapevines and olive trees, too — but not in the stark Greek setting to which we'd become accustomed.

Here by midafternoon . . . roaming through the main part of the city with Dr. Labban. Much less confusing than Athens was! The Romans just knew how to plan a city, that's all.

What's the seminar like, anyway? Defying definition, it is more than a tour and nothing like a typical Davidson class. It's learning 24 hours a day, seven days a week for three months. It's learning the essential elements of a Greek temple by examining the Hephaestum in Athens. It's appreciating Greek orthodoxy by attending Sunday morning services. It's braving the winds at Cape Sounion to understand the ancients' reverence for Poseidon. It's tracing the steps of Pliny through the streets of Pompeii and listening to Verdi in the Teatro del San Carlo, Naples.

In order to participate in the course, each participant must write two lengthy research papers, one for each half of the trip, to be delivered sometime during the tour. Several books must be read during the course of the trip. Also reaction-type assignments are completed throughout the ten weeks.

The benefits of the trip are numerous: the friendships and attachments formed, the beauty of the landscape and scenery, especially in Greece, and the wonder of seeing art treasures previously studied. It is a very satisfying, rich experience which marks the end of an era. 1984 is the last year Dr. Labban acts as the director of the Classics Abroad Seminar.

Sutton enjoys life on the Mediterranean

If you are a sophomore or a junior, he is the professor you never had. But now you are in luck: Dr. Homer Sutton has returned from Montpellier, France to resume his teaching position in the French department. A Davidson alumnus, Sutton went on the Junior Year Abroad program during the 1969-70 school year. After college graduation he conducted the Indiana University honors program in France for five summers and taught American Civilization at a branch of the Sorbonne for two years. In this way he prepared himself for the resident directorship of Davidson's Montpellier program.

Dr. Sutton has not found the readjustment to Davidson difficult. The inefficiency of the French banks, postal system, and college administration compared to those in America made him glad to be back. He was also happy to return to a small town atmosphere after the "relative anonymity" among Montpellier's 250,000 inhabitants. He does, however, miss the Mediterranean and the ability to know his students on a more personal level.

The J.Y.A. program at Montpellier consists of twenty to twenty-five American college students from Davidson and other schools attending classes at the University of Montpellier. The classes are entirely in French, and the Americans are treated as French students. As the director, Dr. Sutton saw that they integrated themselves among the French students by arranging excursions for them. He helped them with academic or personal problems and also taught courses for the group during the year.

Dr. Sutton believes the J.Y.A. program is "one of the best experiences Davidson has to offer." He says the students grow up quickly, gaining independence and self-reliance as they learn to fend for themselves. They are thrust into a totally different environment and "see that much of what we consider absolute is only relative." The students not only grow intellectually, but also learn a great deal about themselves and others.

The return to Davidson caused few problems for Dr. Sutton and his family. His French wife, Catherine, is teaching one course at Davidson. Dr. Sutton believes that she misses France as anyone would miss her own country but this feeling is lessened by their spending nine out of the last ten summers in France. The Suttons also have a sixteen-month old daughter. Dr. Sutton said she is completely bilingual — she knows four words — two in each language! Like her parents, she is getting the best of both worlds.

Krentz: Volleyball czar

While at Yale Dr. Peter Krentz took his mind off the ancient Greeks by losing himself in a nice clean extracurricular activity — volleyball.

Yale's volleyball team was what Davidson would label a "club team" — or, as Dr. Krentz said, "sort of intercollegiate," with practices three nights a week and tours on Saturdays. Krentz said that playing on the team was "not too time-consuming."

The Yale club team had no coach; according to Krentz, the increased competitiveness of that system was a great improvement over traditional high-school systems.

When Krentz was a senior, Yale's team won the Eastern Conference Volleyball Championship and traveled to UCLA to compete in the national tournament as the east coast representatives. They were, in Krentz's words, "clobbered."

During graduate school, also at Yale,

Krentz continued his volleyball interest by coaching. At Davidson he still pursues the sport, starring for the "Old Men," the faculty's IMAC volleyball team. The "Old Men" have been reigning champions for four consecutive years. In addition to IMAC participation, the faculty team also competes in the Mooresville league.

There are several reasons that Krentz enjoys volleyball so much. The possibility of "phenomenal comebacks" is a feature that attracts Krentz to volleyball. He also likes the fact that an individual player is never a star, only a part of the team: "You do nothing by yourself, and the enemy is on the other side of the net."

The "Old Men" will soon begin their season's practices. Meanwhile, Krentz is finishing his second book — The Sin at New Haven.

Third World gives new perspective

It had been 11 years since he had taught in a Third World country, and Professor Harris Proctor, chairman of the Political Science Department, felt that it was time to go again. So he applied for a Watson Fellowship.

When asked on the application why he wanted to teach in a Third World country, he stated that "I have found it extremely stimulating intellectually to teach in Third World countries. I desire a direct knowledge of Indian political attitudes and behavior, and to understand more fully how India is coping with the political changes of modernization."

Proctor, who taught one year in Egypt, one in Kenya, and one in Tanzania before coming to Davidson in 1970, has a love for living and teaching in environments different from his own. "It really changes your perspective," he said.

"Few Third World countries have been able to maintain a democracy, but India has. I had read about it, but I was surprised at how lively the political discussion was there — so much more than in other countries. The people were allowed to criticize the government freely, and there was a lively press. The students and faculty were more politically active than the students here."

Proctor taught in the University of Delhi at St. Stephens, a liberal arts college much like Davidson. St. Stephens went co-ed about the same time Davidson did. The morale there was very high, Proctor said, "The students were proud to be there. They are almost guaranteed a job when they graduate. It is also competitive. The college has received 9,000 applications for 280 vacancies next year."

While teaching courses in comparative and African politics, as well as lecturing at other universities in India, Proctor and his wife traveled throughout the country. "We never got bored. There is just so much to see in India, the Taj Mahal, archeological sights, the mountains, palaces . . .

"The population is anything but homogeneous; traveling from place to place was like going through different countries. We relied on the local economy entirely. We didn't have any canned food — all fresh. The faculty and people we met were very hospitable, much more so than in the other countries I've taught."

Proctor also carried out a research project on the role played by members of a committee of the Indian Parliament appointed by the president to represent art, science, literature, and social service, and on how they interpret their responsibility.

"As a political scientist, it was interesting to see how a Third World country is developing successfully through the democratic route," Proctor said.

Case enjoys bird watching

Diversity... it colors our campus. Davidson students are not produced from a mold; we are different. We come from many different backgrounds and bring with us a variety of interests and goals. Likewise, the professors that teach us are a diverse group; each with his own qualities that make him unique and interesting. Mr. Hogan finds his niche in his printing shop; Professor Clark creates gnomes; Dr. Bliss enjoys photography; and Dr. Case watches birds. When asked about her interest in birds, Dr. Case smiles, her eyes light up, and her enthusiasm is quickly revealed. If I had anticipated a more "scientific" reason for her interest in birds, her response, "because they're fun," was natural and obviously sincere. She watches birds because she enjoys them. What better reason could there be?

Her hobby began ten years ago when she arrived at Davidson to teach biology. She had some interest in birds as a graduate student up north, but because of the region's cold temperatures, relatively few species of birds appear. She was surprised by the wide variety of birds in Davidson and began to watch them.

Of course, being a biologist, her hobby is not completely without a scientific side. She has conducted some research on birds and their assorted behaviors. Her major project involved imprinting in ducks and chicks. Her goal was to determine the sensitive period during which these young birds imprint to their mother. She has also done some work on the social behavior of zebra finches and has assisted students on various projects.

Several years ago Case and a student began small scale work on the rehabilitation of birds.

Dana Science lab now houses an owl and a hawk, both of which are permanently injured and, therefore, non-releasable. They would not be able to survive if they were allowed to return to their natural environments. Dr. Case is assisted by several Davidson students in caring for the birds. The owl and the hawk are now being used for educational purposes. They travel to local schools and make frequent visits to Discovery Place, a natural science museum in Charlotte. According to Dr. Case, these birds are "a lot of fun."

Perhaps the Animal Behavior student who has spent a week chasing a mocking bird around campus only to discover ten minutes before his recitation that his mocking bird is really a blue jay, fails to find any pleasure in bird watching. Perhaps, after spending a week watching Ring Neck Doves do what they do best (use your imagination), one cannot believe that some people actually watch birds for fun. Bird watchers, are, however, an extant species.

Case's interest in birds inspired her to begin an organization called the Community Bird Watchers. The group meets once a month and travels to various locations to watch birds. There are usually five to ten bird lovers equipped with binoculars and ready to observe their feathered friends. Their goal is purely enjoyment.

Carroll and chemistry class write patent number 4410509

Tired of pesky houseflies in your dorm room? Dr. Felix Carroll has received a patent on the chemicals used to attract these nuisances. Will this professor and his group of research students lead the eradication of the world's population and put the fly-swatter industry out of business? Probably not.

Carroll was awarded a research grant from the North Carolina Board of Science and Technology in 1976 for the research of housefly pheromones, reproductive hormones that attract flies of the opposite sex. The money allowed Carroll and a large number of Davidson students to characterize, test, and synthesize these chemicals. Their goal was to provide a substance that would attract many houseflies to a small amount of pesticide.

The research at Davidson progressed from 1975 into 1979. By 1980, Carroll and his students published their findings in the Journal of Agriculture and Food Chemistry. The group was then ready to apply for a patent, a feat which proved to be no easy proposition. The patent office requires that an application be filed no more than one year after the findings have been published. This meant that since the group could not afford a patent lawyer, Carroll had to research the existing files in Washington himself. With the help of John Hornigle, a Davidson graduate and practicing lawyer, Carroll wrote the application, realizing that the patent office lawyers would whittle down the claims as much as possible. As anticipated, the patent office narrowed the group's claims considerably and almost rejected the application because the scientific name of the housefly was never mentioned.

Finally, the patent office accepted the application and the group owned the patent number 4410509. Unfortunately, the claims were so limited that other producers could synthesize something so close to Carroll's chemical that it would serve the same function. Also, Carroll had found that the houseflies were not sufficiently attracted to the pheromones to induce widespread ingestion of the pesticide.

Carroll said, however, that he realized the poor prospect of commercial success when he applied for the patent. He continued the quest for the patent because the application process is included in his chemistry class. Therefore, the whole procedure was not a failure because future students will benefit from Carroll's experience with patent application. Furthermore, Carroll has received requests from twelve countries for reprinting his group's article in the Journal of Agriculture and Food Chemistry.

The Freshman Experience

The Freshman Experience at Davidson begins long before the student attends his/her first class, makes friends with a far-away stranger, or even sets foot on Davidson's precious soil. It begins about the same time as that familiar disease, common to all graduating seniors and appropriately named "senioritis", sets in and plagues the once-ambitious mind of the college-bound student.

Specifically, Davidson "prospectives," the title given to all applicants to the College, are immediately exposed to the rigors typical of Davidson academia when they receive a long application composed of four thought-provoking essays, recommendation forms for acquaintances in several respectable community positions, and a space provided for listing of honors, awards, and extra-curricular activities. For those completing the thorough application process, the initial stages of the Freshman Experience are under way.

A congratulatory acceptance letter is followed by a series of over-stuffed mailings stocked full with information regarding the transition into college life at Davidson, i.e. course registration; P.O. box application; fraternity, club, and athletic information; laundry number assignment; Wildcat Handbook; and tips on preparing for dorm life and academics.

Included in the summer mailing is information on orientation, the most important facet of the introduction to the college. The hopes, and fears, and expectations of every freshman wax as the days wane before the beginning of their college careers.

On that magical day, September 7, 1983, (ah! I remember it well!) students from all corners of the globe assembled on Davidson's grounds. For some, it was the first encounter while for many others, it was another visit, but it was for real — and for good. The rush of moving into dorms, meeting roommates, hallmates, and new faces, taking placement tests, attending seminars and lectures, and trying to maintain some sense of sanity confronted and baffled these newcomers to Davidson. At last, the final farewells were bid to teary-eyed parents, and the events of which future memories would be made, began.

Suddenly, upperclassmen began to return to the stomping grounds, a head higher on the totem pole.

The first week of classes saw many lost sheep pulling on "push" doors and staring blankly at confusing numbers on Chambers classroom doors.

It saw cookouts, a regatta at Lake Norman, name games, and mixers to allow for relaxation and a breather for tormented minds and bodies.

It saw a bit of homesickness, but much more was hidden inside the freshly hardened facades of determined youngsters making their new home away from home.

It saw frequent trips to the P.O. by freshmen in search of a care-package, letter, or first "social security" check from home.

Although the rigors of the first week were, at times, unpleasant, it didn't take long for the freshmen to look back in retrospect and smile at the progress made and the rough trails successfully trodden. Many will agree that, while the "breaking in" stages of the Freshman Experience may be painful at first, the pleasant memories overshadow the growing pains associated with the new adjustments.

The hall counselors, or "substitute parents", have a tremendous record for providing assistance to the freshmen and especially to those on their own halls. They serve as parents through hardships; friends for sharing good times; advisors during course registrations; and a pair of shoulders to cry on when grade reports are distributed. The successes of many freshmen can be largely attributed to those two caring individuals behind the door on which the "open, come in" sign is displayed.

Some freshmen consider the classes to be a particularly memorable aspect of that first year, but the most cherished aspect seems to be the many friends that are made, especially the first term or so. Each year, the Housing Office carefully selects compatible room-and-hall mates. And it makes sense. The people you live with should be the ones you will enjoy. The results are astonishing. Usually, a freshman's closest friends are those who are his hall-mates. This situation lends itself very well to the trying times of hardcore academic pressures. The freshman hall is a great place to meet and become friends with people who are going through similar experiences. It also provides a great setting for gossiping, lounging around, dancing, throwing spontaneous parties, and just kicking back and taking it all in stride.

Freshman year creates many memories. Some students remember the parties, others the raids through Richardson, while still others reflect on those killer examinations. Remember the Lake Campus afternoons; remember the spirit felt at the sports events: the way we yelled and pulled for our Wildcats; the crazy mixers which offered relief from the "freshman blues"; the midnight runs to "Ham and Eggs"; and all those imaginative projects required of pledges in search of brotherhood. All these events and countless others make up that year we will long remember as one of the most memorable times of our lives. The "Freshmen Experience" . . . nothing else like it.

Uncommonly Good

You dial 892-FOOD. On the other end of the line, you hear, "Today, in honor of Puritan Settlement Day, the luncheon menu in the Vail Commons will feature Chicken Croquettes and garden casserole. In the Union Cafe, featured will be the Wildcat Special."

Minnie Junkin is at it again! Mrs. Junkin, Assistant Manager of the Commons, and Carl Pritchard, Director of the Dining Service, record a 45-second message each week-night giving the next day's menu. The menu system operates on a five-week cycle (unlike most schools' three-week cycle) with little repetition of menu items during that period. Under Pritchard's direction, the Dining Service operates four branches: the Commons, the Union Cafe (snack bar), the 900 Room, and the catering service. All freshmen have meal cards which they may use in the Commons or at lunchtime in the snack bar; upperclassmen may also choose to continue this plan.

The Vail Commons, built in 1981, boasts some of the best institutional food around, according to both visitors and students. The "un-cafeteria-like" atmosphere, with spacious high ceilings, a wall of windows, and even planters with trees, resembles a state park.

Decisions, decisions! Amy Harrell must face the wide array of Commons desserts.

Imports: Davidson Disease?

"No party is immune to imports," reports a Davidson SAE.

"Import" is the popular term for any non-Davidson student at a college party. Because of the current two-to-one ratio of men and women and a history of low percentages of women, Davidson continues its tradition of inviting women from other schools, primarily Queens College of Charlotte and Salem College of Winston-Salem, to college parties.

After a long night of parties, three out of town guests snooze on the floor of Richardson.

Self-Selection

It's November. I'm only a lowly freshman and I'm being asked to make a decision which, according to the upperclassmen, could mean the difference between social life or social suicide. And to make matters worse, my hall counselors, those friendly, trustworthy people who have always been willing to dole out advice (even when I don't ask for it) have suddenly become non-committal. They refuse to explain what is meant by such terms as "hoddy" or "spee."

Suddenly everyone's become my buddy. Most parties are open. My hall counselors and the Patterson Court Council people refuse to call all this attention "rush." I've heard rumors about "oral encouragements" and "oral discouragements", but what are they? Other schools have "bids" and I have the feeling that "oral encouragements" somehow resemble these. Still, I'm so confused! An "oral encouragement" sounds like a fraternity brother should come up to me, pat me on the back and say "Jolly good show, old boy! I'm so pleased to see you!"

Eating houses also give a confusing presentation of themselves. Let's talk about basic public relations, okay? Take Emanon — a selling point, say Emonites, is that Emanon is "no name spelled backwards." So being nameless and faceless is supposed to impress me? Take PAX — what does that stand for? PAX Romana? A spiritual peace? Fannie and Mable are proud of their food fights and their 24-hour beer tap. Frankly, though, those people frighten me.

What to do? I think I'll just pray to the self-selection gods and hope they are kind to my social life.

Surrogate parents chosen for freshmen

By the time Davidson students reach their junior year, they are looking for an outlet for their ambition and energy. Some opt for a JYA excursion. Others seek office in a campus organization. And one very energetic group of men and women become freshman hall counselors.

Before they can assume this responsibility, though, they must prove themselves worthy. A long and thorough application process tests the field of hall counselor hopefuls and results in the appointment of 28 people, with four alternates, to fill the job.

Any sophomore interested in becoming a hall counselor can apply. The first step is a written application, complete with mind-probing essay questions on such subjects as the Honor Code and self-analysis. 60 people took this first step in 1984.

The second step in the process was a meeting of all the applicants. They were asked to fill out peer evaluations on the other applicants, stating their opinions on the ability of each to be a hall counselor. Present and past hall counselors also evaluated the applicants, and a group of faculty advisers participated as well. For some applicants this was a difficult step because they had to be careful not to compare the people they evaluated to themselves.

After the initial group meeting, each applicant underwent two interviews. Will Terry, Sue Ross, the freshman advisers, a present hall counselor, a freshman, and a faculty member conducted the interviews. At the end of the interview period, these interviewers met to choose next year's hall counselors.

Obviously, this arduous process calls for applicants to have a true desire to be hall counselors, and they did. One applicant said that the best advice she received was to "examine her motivations" for becoming a hall counselor. Many applicants were active in campus activities and wanted to share their enthusiasm for Davidson with incoming freshmen, while at the same time improving themselves.

After the hall counselors were chosen, they went on a weekend retreat to get to know their roommates and to prepare themselves for the next year. Role-playing proved a helpful way of learning to handle problems that might arise on a freshman hall. They discussed the Honor Code, the Code of Responsibility, drug and alcohol abuse, and suicide. The "hall-counselors-elect" had to reach an agreement as to how they would handle marijuana use and vandalism on the freshman halls.

The retreat made the hall counselors realize the full extent of their responsibilities. Mary Beth Harding, one of the chosen few, said that since most of the applicants had enjoyed their freshman years, it was easy for them to forget the hard times they endured. The retreat offered a chance for them to come to grips with the problems they might face. Students came away from the retreat "excited, but prepared and aware".

28 people are now anticipating a challenging and fun junior year as the counselor for a hall full of new Davidson students. Harding said she was now looking forward to "getting to know 30 new people and making 30 new friends."

Sophomore slump strikes again

After a summer of waitressing at the Quincy's Family Steak House of Thomasville, Georgia, I wanted to return to Davidson, sleep in a loft, eat in an eating house, and live in a co-ed dorm. I was ready to be a sophomore.

When I was a freshman, I heard about the "sophomore slump" phenomenon. Those who had lived through it described it, those who were experiencing it lamented it, and we freshmen feared and half-disbelieved it.

Sophomore girls wailed to us about how, because of us, nobody noticed them. Sophomore guys complained that they weren't juniors and seniors and that work just wasn't a thrill. All of them seemed to feel somewhat lost, caught between a colorful class of New People and two important classes of Mature People. They felt as interesting, and as loved, as the Cream of Wheat served in the Commons. Worst of all, they convinced us that "sophomore slump" was virtually inevitable.

I tended to scoff. A few considerate sophomores had told me that their own slumps resulted from bigger causes than sophomorehood. Sophomore year is one year closer to junior year abroad. Maturation requires growing pains. Even slumping bea waitressing at Quincy's.

Despite my courageous resolutions, however, I did groan and grit my teeth when B... Bolding, in July, sent us sophomore women a letter. The letter announced — in a nastily cheerful tone — that the number of incoming freshman girls was unusually large. Apallingly large.

And despite my initial determined excitement, I did weep when I perceived that Davidson College had not changed in the slightest. That sophomore year promised repetition at its finest, minus the attention of older men. That I couldn't even transfer because I hadn't finished Humes.

So the excitement of seeing friends again and comparing summer tans and trips did shrink when we noticed the lack of invitations to this barbeque, that semi-formal. The awkwardness of being neither New or quite Established did begin to irritate us periodically, as did Dr. R. F. Nelson's favorite wry phrase, fraught with negative implications: "In your average sophomore survey class . . ."

We slumped our share.

We have discovered, nonetheless, the positive elements of sophomore year.

No more mixers. Greece, Spain. Hall counselor and JYA decisions. A feeling of experience, authority. (At least a little.) Less pressure to go to every party. More diverse halls. Taking classes with real numbers in between the first "1" and the last "1". Better spring breaks. Continuing close friendships. A calmer peace.

Wise fool that I am, I'd rather be a junior or senior than a sophomore.

But I'd rather be a sophomore than a freshman.

J.Y.D.: Junior year at Davidson

Junior year is often used to further one's education in areas other than academia. Many programs exist which offer opportunities for such enrichment. One of the most popular is the JYA (Junior Year Abroad) program. Hall Counseling attracted another segment of the junior class, those interested in developing inter-personal (parental?) skills.

All of this sounds very noble and idealistic. Certainly everyone involved in JYA, JYB (Junior Year in Belk) or JYR (Junior Year in Richardson) deserves a pat on the back, but what about the rest of the junior class; those who choose the JYD (Junior Year at Davidson) option? Doesn't this silent majority deserve a round of applause also? It takes creativity to stay in Davidson and make junior year exhilarating.

Murray Simpson and Keith Revell are such creative people. They decided a key element to a great year is a great room, so they made one wall in B404 into a work of art. Their mural is a variation of Kenneth Noland's "Graded Variations" (1967) and uses a full spectrum of colors. Says Revell, who is fond of using oxymorons, the painted wall gives the room the effect of "elegant poverty."

Nancy Rosselot has found a program not under the auspices of Davidson College which keeps her busy: the Girl Scout Program. Brownie Troop 44 has occupied Nancy's Wednesday afternoons. Nancy has organized cookie sales, field trips to places like Discovery Place in Charlotte, and an annual talent show. This year, Troop 44 even had an art display in First Union Bank in Davidson.

Scott Huie is one of the best known faces in the junior class. "Fast Scottie" has his ears tuned to the music business. He spins tunes and d.j.'s for discos on Patterson Court and Charlotte high school dances. Through connections with his brother, a New York based music manager, "Fast Scottie" has also been able to bring groups such as The Fixx to Davidson for Concerts.

Junior Year at Davidson. It gives one a perspective on ingenuity.

Not just another pretty face, local personality, Scott Huie has used his junior year to create a reputation as a great tune spinner and d.j.

"There's something in my pocket . . ." sings Nancy Rosselot and her band of brownies.

The fine art of beer brewing

Beer can be expensive. What do you do when your bank account is rapidly depleting, you can't buy a pitcher of beer in the 900 Room anymore, and you need a drink? You brew your own beer in your room, that's what you do.

When Mike Tantillo and Hartley Hall decided that their beer habit was becoming a financial burden, "Raumbrau" (according to Hall, a loose German translation for "room beer") was born. What started as an economic endeavor has now turned into a matter of pride. The pair have gained an increasing expertise in beer brewing and have an amber, a light pilsner, and a stout among their stock.

At the end of fall term, Tantillo and Hall made an investment in the vat and other equipment needed for their project. After procuring these items from Alternative Beverages in Charlotte, the cost for a case of "Raumbrau" was reduced to the price of the ingredients alone: $2.88.

To brew the golden delight, the following steps are involved: First the worts must be mixed — water, malt, sugar and yeast form this worts. For different brews, other ingredients, such as hops, barley etc are added. The mixture is sprinkled with yeast and allowed to sit for one week. The final step is to add one cup of sugar, and then to bottle. The beer stays in the bottle and ferments for 2-6 months, peaking at the 6 mos. period. Beer may be stored for up to one year after this time. They have discovered that Par 4 takes returnable bottles and will sell them bottles for $2.00 a case.

Says Hartley Hall, originator of "Raumbrau," about his product, "When I was in England last summer, the beer had a radically different taste from the beer in the U.S. It had more body, more flavor. Our beer is like that, it has character."

—Kathy Gratto

In the KA tradition, Mike Wilkinson wishes Hartley Hall a special Merry Christmas.

Graduating: in three years?

Brady and McCullen is a beautiful May morning. They are standing across the outdoor stage, looking towards your outstretched hands. They are reaching the podium, Vice President of Academic Affairs Price Zimmerman announces, "And graduating in three years, may I present to you . . ."

Only in your dreams, right? Not necessarily so. In fact, two juniors (seniors?!) have accomplished this awesome feat. Although they entered Davidson as members of the class of '85, Scott Brady and Bob McCullen will be concluding their studies this year with the class of '84.

"How?" you ask. With a combination of summer school, AP credits, contract courses and independent studies, Brady and McCullen managed to pull together the necessary requirements for graduation.

Want more details? Well, for only $9.95 and two biochem books the Brady-McCullen plan can be yours . . .

Seriously, though, folks, the pair's similar accomplishment should not be so easily dismissed. It was one achievement among several they made in their shortened Davidson careers. Brady, for example, completed enough courses to fulfill both his major's (religion) requirements and enough science to enter medical school. At the same time, he was an active member of PAX, participated in an independent study at Lowrance Hospital in Mooresville, and served as interim minister at Love Valley Church. Brady was a leader in Young Life and hoped to do missionary work in Brazil the summer after graduation. In the long run his plans revolved around medical missionary work.

McCullen, too, participated in several medical-related internships. He was a member of the wrestling team and of the club rugby team, was a minor officer in Phi Delta Theta, and was a 15 hour-per-week work-study student. McCullen, a chemistry major, was accepted for medical school by UNC-CH. He expressed no regrets at his following a three year plan. He says, "I don't feel like I missed anything. Sure, I worked hard, but I had good times too."

Brade reiterated this sentiment. "I don't feel like I let anything pass me by. If I wanted to do something, I made time for it," he said. Organization, then, appeared to be the key to the pair's success. With a plan of action and the desire to accomplish it, Brady and McCullen dared to go where no man had gone before . . . to the graduation stage a year early!

—Catherine Finegan

Bob McCullen heads for medical school at UNC-CH after his early graduation.

The empty nest syndrome

I'm too young for this to be happening to me! The Empty Nest Syndrome is not supposed to hit until a person is in his or her forties. Of course, how many people do you know who became unwed mothers at the tender age of twenty to thirty darling daughters. At least I'm not alone, my co-parent has some of the same feelings I do.

Still, it's hard to realize that your children — even if they are really only adopted for the period of their freshman year — don't need you anymore. They're growing up. They are all capable of choosing the correct classes, finding their way around the campus, dealing with Davidson dating, and planning their own social events. I should be happy, I've done my job; they're all well-adjusted to college life.

For some reason I like being called "Mom," though. And I've become used to sleeping with a certain amount of noise outside on the hall at 3:00 in the morning. How am I going to sleep where it's quiet next year? And what am I going to do with my toaster oven now that I don't need to bake cookies and cakes for birthdays?

I won't miss the boys running through the hall covered with mud after their charming head ball fraternity escapades, and I won't miss the shaving cream coating our doors received . . . well, practical jokes are kind of fun. I might miss them just a little.

Sometimes the girls on the hall ask me how I'm feeling. That's nice. I think I'd rather be their friend than their mother anyway. Really, I guess I'm not losing thirty daughters, I'm gaining thirty friends.

Lending a fatherly touch of advice to his freshman hall charges, Jim Shaw and the men of Third West Belk construct a raft for the Regatta. (far left).

Away from his hall and his freshmen, junior hall counselor John Hackett concentrates on his back-hand.

Gamophobia epidemic strikes junior class

Fear of marriage. Characterized by fear of involvement in any sort of marital relationship. Strong fear of being tied down. Often accompanied by an almost claustrophobic quality. Onset frequently caused by the sight of engagement rings and by news of engagements of college friends, usually seniors. Victims are inclined to exhibitions of shock, rage, withdrawal from society, and laughter.

Generally contracted in its most serious form by members of the junior class. Strikes males and females with equal likelihood. Gamophobia reached epidemic proportions at Davidson College in early January 1984. Research indicates outbreak due to proportionately large number of proposals during Christmas holidays. A very few juniors seem to have been immune to said epidemic. Studies have shown that a great percentage of those immune to the disease were wearing an engagement ring (females) or were likely to enter into a premarital agreement in the near future (males and females).

Prognosis varies among individuals. Recovery time depends on a number of factors. These include personal relationships, willingness to change attitudes, and age. Most victims seem to make a complete recovery and marry within a few years. A few victims never recover. Mortality rate is zero as far as current data shows.

Questioning possible victims about reactions to marriage provides best diagnostic tools. The following comments from interviews with victims of the disease illustrate its effects.

"I think they're foolish, that's what I think. No woman is worth that much. 'There's a whole world out there. To be tied down in marriage . . .!'"

"Gamophobia? Oh — fear of marriage. Yeah. I've got it."

"My aunt always said two things: Life is not fair, and don't marry before you're twenty-five."

"I'm still a young pup. I just started ordering mixed drinks!"

(Look of shock) "I've never been in a wedding before."

"They're crazy. That's fine for them if that's what they want to do, but hell if I'm gonna get married right out of school."

"It seems like an impossibility the way my dating life's been."

"Marriage? Can we talk about puberty instead?"

"It seems kind of far away . . ."

"They're making terrible mistakes!"

FINAL NOTE: No immunization available.

Mom and Dad

IN HONOR OF TRACY JEAN ASKEW THE GREATER THING

Great it is to believe the dream
 As we stand in youth by the starry stream,
 A greater thing is to fight life through
 And say at the end, The dream was true.
 We pray that God, your Creator, and Jesus,
 Your Savior, will guide and direct
 Your life and through the Holy Spirit
 Your dreams will all come true. Thank You for making us so proud.

We love you, Mother and Dad

Ode To A Toad

What a delightful frog came hopping our way one January day. He settled on the coast, the lilly pad with the most. He was groomed in the Forest of the Tiger, But he found the Wildcat
Pond to be brighter. Go for it Frog!

Love, M & D.

Go for it, Steve Soud!
